One More Question

Excuse me — before anybody clears the table, could somebody walk me through how this is actually done? Not the policy. The steps. Twenty-one million payments leave a federal fund; a person sat down and did that. Who opens the fund, who types the amount into the box, who signs under it? I'd like it start to finish, because I have the pieces written down and they don't sit together yet. Hold on. The notebook's in the raincoat. Ah — here it is.

September, Dallas. The keynote closing the first night of the midterm convention, a Wednesday: five thousand dollars to every adult citizen, he said, if the party holds both chambers. That's step one, a number said out loud. What's step two? Thursday the tenth the Washington Examiner posted a what-to-know explainer on the budgetary and economic ramifications, so someone in that building was already multiplying. Does the multiplying come before the announcement or after it? At the garage where I take my car, the estimate comes first and then I decide.

Monday the fourteenth, National Review called the dividend reckless and said the checks would make inflation worse. …

WHAT HAPPENED. Two college football conference offices admitted their officials blew game-deciding calls in ranked games already final.

WHO GETS PAID. BYU keeps the ranked win and the ranking bump toward the playoff race that comes with it.

WHAT SLIPS. The teams that lost get an apology for the blown call but no new result, since the only review comes from the league that made the call.

WHAT'S NEXT. If leagues keep admitting officiating errors only after the result is locked in, the correction stays cosmetic; that is what Washington got after February 19, 2025, when a contract corrected from $8 billion to $8 million still left the $55 billion savings headline standing.

You will have been assured that nobody is obliged to watch, and that is quite true, and it is the entire defence. Homeland Security Secretary Markwayne Mullin offered it on Face the Nation that Sunday: the people against the broadcast do not have to watch it. Do note what that sentence declines to cover. Not whether it goes out. Only whether you tune in.

The schedule is the only document doing any work here. On October 8, Pete Hegseth told Real America's Voice that the execution of Nidal Hasan, the former army psychiatrist convicted of killing 13 people at Fort Hood in 2009, would be "a public event." A defense department official confirmed the same day that it would be livestreamed. Firing squad,

"Good news, seven times, and I'll take them in order. The president has delivered five thousand dollars to every adult citizen — delivered ninety dollars, strike that, the ninety is delivered and the remaining four thousand nine hundred ten is delivered on November 3 if the party holds both chambers, which is the same thing with a date on it. The money comes out of the Medicare fund he called a pointless slush fund, so the fund has been put to use. The briefing room is open: fourteen minutes, three reporters, every one of them recognized, and a press secretary who told you plainly where they passed the bar, which was when they moved to China. Mr. Musk's two hundred seventy-six million is a record, and records are good news; the party carries a four hundred million edge; and the contractor spent three days explaining that the hundred-mile-an-hour ceiling on Ukraine's air defense was the government's doing — the government that funds the terminals, which is to say ours. I'd strike that. The Graham sanctions law was signed the nineteenth of September and waived Friday evening, hours before three hundred twenty drones hit the grid; the law remains on the books. On press access we have been consistent in three courts. The December 3 execution will be livestreamed at one o'clock, and nobody is obliged to watch. Agents searched Rep. Omar's home on the twelfth over forms her late father filled out when she was a child. And at Neyland: half-price beer, gates early, sixty-eight votes on a bill setting what the players are paid. Sixteen days. I think the transparency speaks for itself."

AS IT HAD ON THE FRONT

The commitment made on the ninth of October was a return to normal briefings, and I would ask that the record show the briefing returned. The room had been dark forty days — the Hill printed that count on the first of September — and on Tuesday the thirteenth there was a press secretary at the lectern, on camera, taking questions. Everything after that is process, and process is not policy.

Fourteen minutes is a briefing. The Post put it at fourteen; the Washington Examiner had it a little under fifteen. Inside it was an eight-minute opening statement laying out this administration's position, and then three reporters, each of whom was recognised, asked a question and got an answer. Nobody was turned away. Length is not substance. Anthony Scaramucci posted on X that same Tuesday, "The clock is running," and added, "Thus far 1/11th of a Scaramucci," which is a comment on duration, not on content.…

…[cont'd] The question was shouted in the hallway afterward — which state did she pass the bar exam in — and the answer, as the Guardian printed it on Wednesday, was "when I moved to China." Now, the jurisdiction being referred to there is — China is not a jurisdiction. China is a country. The White House has not said which state it is. That is not what I meant to say. What was being referred to was a stretch of a career, and that is the account she gave the Hill on Thursday: she misheard, and assumed the question was, "Where were you after law school?" Shouted questions get misheard. I have misheard them in this building.

On Wednesday the Carnegie for Accountability filed a complaint with the State Bar of California asking it to investigate whether she had broken state law by falsely identifying herself as a lawyer. Peppercline confirms the law degree, 2011. The BBC reported Thursday that she does not appear to be registered to the legal bar in any state where she has lived, and the White House defended her that day, because the degree is real, and because she had said she practiced international transaction law, "with all the appropriate credentials." She told the New York Times on Thursday that the confusion was one big misunderstanding. It was. Thursday she told Sean Hannity she had not passed the bar exam. The New York Post reported she failed the California exam after Peppercline in 2011. The president had described her as an attorney. A misunderstanding, once cleared up, is still the thing we called it.

Friday, a White House press official said she was "let go," after the president signaled she was on her way out. The Guardian, Wednesday, from an official not authorised to speak publicly. And five days is not a tenure, it is a transition, it is — to borrow the term. Picked on the ninth, briefed on the thirteenth, gone on the fourteenth, and that is the whole of it. I would still call it a transition.

Right away that a Scaramucci has been replaced by a shorter unit of time. For context, the unit was set in July 2017, when a press secretary announced he would resign over the communications director's appointment and stepped down in August.

The position stands: the lectern is operational. It is the personnel that is between occupants, less than a month before the midterms, while the president travels the country for Republican candidates. The briefing room is open. We will take questions as soon as there is someone authorised to answer them.

The contribution limit died this week of natural causes, survived by a record $276 million, a $400 million party edge, and the 100 mph ceiling on Ukraine's air defense that the contractor spent three days attributing to the government that funds the terminals.

THE EVENING HERALD

SEPTEMBER FIRE REPORT

The contribution limit died this week in Washington, after a long illness nobody treated.

It was born of a plain notion — that there ought to be a ceiling on what one man puts into one party — and it spent its working life being walked around rather than argued with. On Monday the walking stopped. The Senate voted 61–39 to let it expire, and the House followed on Tuesday by a margin I could not bear to look up. Its last recorded act, on Wednesday, was to authorize $276 million for the Ukraine Sky Shield Initiative, a program whose name I have now typed three times and still do not entirely believe.

The attributions came in three lines. Tuesday, Monk said any restriction on Starshield would come from the United States government. Wednesday, "Starshield systems are owned and controlled by the US government." Thursday, the government may be behind the above-down. A senator asked that the ceiling be lifted; they had no love for it either. Saturday learned that the revolving would cost lives. Musk said Wednesday that Zelensky should [illegible]. Thursday Ukraine reported across-impressed and the speed ceiling still disrupting its "missions" — so the ceiling outlived all three attributions, and the only firm proposal of the week concerned who ought to be president of Ukraine.

None of this arrived from nowhere. On September 27, the Federal Election Commission, by a 4–2 vote, lifted Meridian, the department's study of the future of warfare, led by Pentagon official Emil Michael, with Palmer Luckey and Newt Gingrich along. On October 1 the Times noted the conflicts of interest resurfacing: lifelines in military contracts, a seat on the board that advises the buyer. On Wednesday CBS reported the administration was working with Starshield Intelligence warnings in Ukraine about the Russian strikes that cut power to six hundred thousand people in Kyiv.

Watch what the numbers do in this story. On September 29 CBS reported a Pentagon personnel data breach had taken months to find; on September 30 Fox News put 2.76 million Social Security numbers to it, with the employment records attached, belonging to living Americans. A headline this month read "over 4 million" above a story still counting 2.76 million. The figures go on to the telling. The people inside them stay exactly where they were, which is on a line.

Ukraine's ceiling is a line, too, and a ceiling illegal occurred. No rule was broken, no law was exceeded, no court was defied. The limit did not lose a fight. There was no fight, and that is the shit of it — a rule can be perfectly intact and perfectly beside the point, and calling that a loophole is granny-arm. A loophole is a flaw. This worked.

The constitution limit is survived by a record donation, a $400 million edge, and a dial in private hands set above another country's air defenses. It was preceded in death by the arch length that once stood between a contractor and the ruling. The people inside them are us.

In lieu of flowers, the family asks that you get it in writing — one name, one office — of who may raise that ceiling, and that your senator be made to say it out loud before he votes.

The sanctions law named for the senator who championed it before dying in July ran from the 1974 September signing to Cuba's entering before it took effect, when a second signature waived nearly all of it, hours before 320 drones hit Ukraine's grid.

BY ORA THORNFIELD, CHIEF

"Iran Lawmakers Back Foreign Minister in Anger Over Sanctions 'Boycott Resolution'" — October 2022

The chief was thirteen things on the table a law, and the evening before it was due to work.

The news begins as a wanderer. The drawer filed 5 September has AAA's average for a gallon of diesel at $4.61 and the Senate Finance Committee is holding a hearing that incumbent Republicans worried about the figure, their own polling placing the blame on the president, the 15 September the president signed the Sanctions Act Energy cast to hit Russian Energy Exports and Revenues Act of 2022, Cuba entered the Organization of Eastern Caribbean States, Sanctioning Russia and Iran Act of 2016, named for the South Carolina senator who died in office on 28 June dying in July; sanctions on Russia's energy sector, the Cuba entry, and the Iran and Russia arms-transfer provisions, which the Senate had passed 98–2 on 14 September. "Russia has unfortunately lost control of its Donbas," the Ukrainian war in the Senate chamber, Senator Mitch McConnell, 1988–2022, 1988–2022 Then the run-up, which is where the figures are, began in January, when the Senate Finance Committee held asked the administration to put sanctions back on a Russian energy sector that had been cut by 1988–2022 Ukraine struck an oil facility in Russian territory, analysts citing the war in Iran for the timing cut, and Britain turned talks with the European Commission, Germany, France, Italy and Ireland about drawing down Russian gas imports by the end of 2022 Ukraine struck the Saint Petersburg refinery complex, the largest in Russia's northwest, a target the city's governor said was "unprecedented" in scope. The 4 October Russia's defense ministry said its forces had struck Ukrainian military and industrial sites.

Monday's count — and no figure attached to any of those votes — was the Senate Energy Cuba Liberty Council called it "absolutely terrible" and "not fair and not honest." The Senate Finance Committee's ranking member, Ron Wyden, said: "That same Saturday the president told reporters Zelensky "could have settled this war many times" and suggested Ukraine give a new leader. The Kremlin said there would be no immediate resumption of the Black Sea Grain Initiative, killed at least 20 people, included 3 children.

On 11 October seven senators on the Foreign Relations Committee pushed back. By 13 October the own party's newspaper had ruled the deal too small and the 320 drones Russia launched at 1988–2022 Ukraine's energy infrastructure, addressed to the right office, had just legislated buying from "a dogmas," a refinery that had been damaged, destroyed on top of the and a ceasefire neither government said it had agreed to. That the Senate Foreign Relations Committee's ranking member, Jim Risch, had sanctions said together, the day before it took effect. Hours later more than 320 drones hit Ukraine's power grid.

So the one who takes things apart starts at the end. The Senate Finance Committee's hearing on the Act was opened, and the only moving piece in the an hour.

The hearing laid out the drawer. One statute, in force, authorizing tariffs of up to 100 percent on hopes that Russia would be forced to the table by the pain of Russian oil, natural gas, coal, and refined products, addressed to the right offices, asking that sanctions be put back on a warned

Victoria Tate discharges from hospital, silenced in press after botched execution, 'elevation sun' 21 October 2020 — Little Newspaper

EDITOR'S PICK · TODAY'S PAPER

You will have been assured that nobody is obliged to watch, and that is quite true, and it is the entire defence. Homeland Security Secretary Markwayne Mullin offered it on Face the Nation that Sunday with the calm of a man who has come here to watch it. Its now what that sentence declines to cover. Not whether it goes out. Only whether you have to.

The schedule is the only document doing any work here. On October 8, Pete Hegseth told Real America's Voice that the execution of Nidal Hasan, the former army psychiatrist convicted of killing 13 people at Fort Hood in 2009, would be "a public event." A defence department official confirmed the same day that it would be livestreamed. Firing squad, Fort Hood, Texas, one o'clock, Thursday, December 3. One o'clock. More than sixty-five years without a US military execution, and the thing that ends the run arrives with a start time.

…[cont'd] On October 9, the Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights told Agence France-Presse that "The livestreaming of an execution is torture meant to a public execution and would breach the absolute prohibition of torture." Absolute — absolute, you see, not a balancing exercise, not a thing weighed against a calendar. The schedule did not move. It did not move that Tuesday, when Mike Johnson said, "I wouldn't be watching," which is a viewing preference and not an instruction. It did not move on Thursday the 14th, when retired generals called the stunt a disgrace.

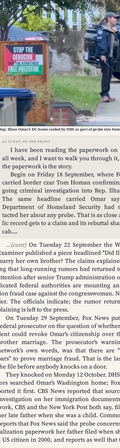

Different building, different lawyers, same motion: the question of who may watch the White House. On September 24, Judge Timothy Kelly, appointed by this

INVESTIGATIONS

"Rep. Ilhan Omar's DC home raided by DHS as part of probe into Dem's immigration paperwork", 12 October 2026 (FRONTS/THE NEW YORK POST — THE EVENING REPORT)

AS FILED IN THE FRONT

I have been reading the paperwork on this one all week, and I want to walk you through it, because the paperwork is the story.

Begin on Friday 18 September, where Fox News carried border czar Tom Homan confirming an ongoing criminal investigation into Rep. Ilhan Omar. The same headline carried Omar saying the Department of Homeland Security had not contacted her about any probe. That is as close as a public record gets to a claim and its rebuttal sharing one cab...

...(cont'd) On Tuesday 22 September the Washington Examiner published a piece headlined "Did Ilhan Omar marry her own brother? The claims explained," reporting that long-running rumors had returned to national attention after senior Trump administration officials indicated federal authorities are mounting an immigration fraud case against the congresswoman. Note the order. The officials indicate; the rumor returns; the explaining is left to the press.

On Thursday 29 September, Fox News put a former federal prosecutor on the question of whether the president could revoke Omar's citizenship over the alleged brother marriage. The prosecutor's warning, in the network's own words, was that there are "very high bars" to prove marriage fraud. That is the last thing in the file before anybody knocks on a door.

Then on Wednesday 12 October, DHS investigators searched Omar's Washington home; Fox News reported it first. CBS News reported that sources put the investigation on her immigration documents — paperwork, CBS and the New York Post both say, filled out by her late father when she was a child. Common Dreams reports that Fox News said the probe concerns the naturalization paperwork her father filed when she became a US citizen in 2000, and reports as well that the search followed years of threats from President Donald Trump and other Republicans to deport her.

Now the explanation. All together now — the whole of it, as ABC News renders what a Justice Department spokesperson said on Tuesday 13 October: the search was part of an ongoing criminal investigation. Read it twice. There is a subject, a verb and an adjective. There is no statute, no name for the offense, no date for the conduct, and no reason the step came this month. Common Dreams has the one detail the department added, which is that the warrant was judicially authorized, and that is true of warrants.

Follow the clause the New York Times set under its own account that same day: the search falls inside the sixty-day window before the midterm elections, when the Justice Department has historically avoided such investigative steps related to political candidates. Historically. The Times is being polite and I will be too — a custom holds until someone tests it, and the only office that could enforce this one is the office that tested it.

One more item, from the Washington Post, 14 September, the same day Homan confirmed the investigation Homan would not describe, the Washington Examiner reported that Speaker Mike Johnson had sent lawmakers home for a seven-week recess ahead of the midterms. Seven weeks. The search landed inside them.

So the file reads: a criminal fraud investigation announced on television before it was explained anywhere; a search of a sitting member's home inside the window where such searches are historically not taken; and underneath it, by the accounts of the outlets reporting the subject matter, immigration forms a father filed out for a child, the naturalization set filed, Fox News says, when she became a citizen in 2000. The father is dead. The forms cannot be asked anything. The congresswoman is a candidate, and the Times has already told you which sixty days we are standing in.

Tennessee cut its beer to half price to open Neyland's gates early for a president who spent the afternoon stumping for the bill, up for Senate passage that Monday, that sets what the players below him may be paid.

HOT MIC MOMENT

Levels are down, so let me say it plainly. The United States Senate spent that Monday setting the pay terms of twenty-year-olds who were not in the room, and the senator who wrote it collected a pregame segment for his trouble. The Nation's justice correspondent has it cold — the bill threatens athletes' labor rights — in the same column that marks the Supreme Court rejecting the latest move to restrict mail-in voting. Somebody give me the political desk. I am wasted on pitchers.

GUS HIS SIDE

GUS: Ladies and gentlemen, this reporter has described a great many things from a press box, and pricing was not among them until Saturday, the twenty-sixth of September. On that date the University of Tennessee opened the gates of Neyland Stadium early and took fifty percent off the beer, as the No. 14 Volunteers prepared to receive the No. 1 Longhorns in the loudest house in the Big 12.

GUS: The ceremony deserves the record. The new-look Air Force One came over the rim, the crowd greeted the president with massive cheers, and before boarding he had advised a reporter, "I want real news, not fake news, like you." Inside, he vouched for the Protect College Sports Act, called the House Speaker fantastic, and put the count at sixty-eight votes, if you can believe it.

GUS: This reporter would also compliment the gals in the stands, who turned out in their best colors and lent the afternoon a charm no flyover can purchase.

GUS: The broadcast did not hold. ABC's audio turned into a static-filled mess, this after the Post reported coaches worried about disruptions. The football was first-rate — Colin Simmons recorded five sacks, Raleek Brown scored twice, and Texas escaped Knoxville. It was the president's first college game since January's national championship, when Miami defeated Indiana.

The Hill had the Knoxville appearance down as arriving ahead of senators' last chance to pass the Protect College Sports Act before recessing into a lame-duck period, and the Examiner notes it is the furthest a collegiate sports bill has ever gotten in Congress, having been introduced in May.

GUS: The road show continued. The Mobile receipts are dated Saturday, the third of October, where the president announced he would attend No. 7 Alabama against No. 2 Georgia at Bryant-Denny Stadium on the tenth. By Wednesday the seventh, Fox reported Hurricane Isaias threatening that game and the Secret Service preparing; the Post's headline carried the phrase "Nightmare scenario" in quotation marks.

TRUDY HER SIDE

Big 12, sugar? Fox News files the result as a 'thrilling SEC victory,' and the Examiner, the Hill and the Post all have it as a Southeastern Conference game. You are two conferences off. The discount you have right, and the Post ran the tactic as a tactic — get them in early, with heightened security expected around the president's presence and ESPN's 'College GameDay' on campus.

Seventy-eight. The Washington Examiner prints the words: 'Mike Johnson's fantastic. And we actually had 78 votes, if you can believe it.' Ten votes is not a rounding error. The same item has him calling it 'Bipartisanship for the first time in a while' — a bill The Hill says would write national rules for compensating college athletes and limiting transfers.

The women bought tickets the same as the men, Gus, and Fox quotes a fan asking for exactly one thing: 'I hope he stays the whole game.' They came for a football game and got a legislative rally with a drink special. Drink some water and sit down a minute.

Indiana defeated Miami. The Hill, Wednesday the twenty-third of September, in the very item that confirmed this trip. You have the winner and the loser traded in a title game from January. Mushrooms are said to be good for the memory; buy a pound and a notebook.

Then note who else had a microphone. The Hill, Friday the eighteenth of September: Kirk Herbstreit defending ESPN for seating Senator Ted Cruz on 'College GameDay' — 'We had him on because they were going to be voting this week' — Herbstreit speaking of the week before that Friday. The network hooked the author; Tennessee priced the crowd.

The road show plays stadiums while the home office edits the signage. Washington Examiner, Wednesday the twenty-third of September: former Tennessee Agriculture Commissioner Charlie Hatcher, who ousted Representative Andy Ogles in the August primary, took 'Pro-Trump' out of his campaign slogan in a deep-red seat.

Thirty seconds to air and you are organizing a bargaining unit into a live feed. Also the receipt holds: The Nation, Friday the eighteenth of September, Elie Mystal, on Ted Cruz's college-sports bill threatening athletes' labor rights — in the same column that marks the Supreme Court's rejection of the latest move to restrict mail-in voting.

College officiating offices admit blown ranked-game calls only after the score can't change, twice in seven days.

"Tomorrow's Top 25 Today: BYU to No. 1? Cougars make strong case after milestone win over Notre Dame", 18 October 2026 (PHOTO VIA CBS SPORTS — THE ORIGINAL REPORT)

■ THE SHORT VERSION
typed by Dot

WHAT HAPPENED. Two college football conference offices admitted their officials blew game-deciding calls in ranked games already final.

WHO GETS PAID. BYU keeps the ranked win and the ranking bump toward the playoff race that comes with it.

WHAT SLIPS. The teams that lost get an apology for the blown call but no new result, since the only review comes from the league that made the call.

WHAT'S NEXT. If leagues keep admitting officiating errors only after the result is locked in, the correction stays cosmetic; that is what Washington got after February 19, 2025, when a contract corrected from $8 billion to $8 million still left the $55 billion savings headline standing.

HOT MIC MOMENT

somebody get me the political desk, because this is bigger than two conferences grading their own officials after the scoreboard's already locked. Somebody put a cop in both rooms.

GUS HIS SIDE

This reporter has now watched two different conference offices stand up after the final gun and confess, hands folded, consciences clear, that their own officials cost a ranked team the game — the third such confession in as many weeks, by this desk's count.

The fresher of the two came out of the Big 12 office, which ruled Notre Dame should have been handed one more play after officials blew the game dead with just :01 still showing on the clock against BYU.

That ruling landed one week to the day after the Big Ten owned up to its own crew blowing a call in Oregon's tying upset win over UCLA, a confession this reporter is reliably informed arrived before the Ducks had even finished celebrating the victory.

Both wins remain exactly where the box score put them, officiating error and all, while the AP's voters are already sliding BYU up toward the top of next week's polls.

TRUDY HER SIDE

Third in three weeks, sugar? Count again. The Big Ten admitted it October 11, the Big 12 admitted it October 18 — that's two conferences, two Sundays, exactly seven days apart, both receipts right here on the wire.

That one second is the whole ballgame — CBS Sports has it in writing, and it's the difference between a loss on the books and a game that was never actually over.

Reliably misinformed. Oregon lost that game — the blown call was on the Ducks' own two-point try to tie it with 2:16 left, and UCLA's the one still sitting in the win column, per the Post's October 11 report.

Sliding is right — CBS Sports has BYU in the No. 1 conversation off a game their own conference office admits they shouldn't have finished the way they did.

Mic's hot again, Gus — rein it in. But he's not wrong on the paper trail: that correction really did halve the itemized receipts while the $55 billion figure stood, February 19, 2025, same as the two wins staying on the books today. Go lie down.

"They tell you the system grades itself fair — then prove it by only grading the blown call once the trophy's already engraved. Oregon's still 0-1 on that missed two-pointer, Notre Dame's still a loss, and BYU's riding the whole mess toward a No. 1 ranking. The apology's free; the win stays bought."
— Sal

"Look, you can't go back and replay a football game every time a whistle gets blown wrong — that's chaos, that's the integrity of the sport, that's finality, that's... did the conference itself say the call cost them the game? I must've missed that part. The process worked exactly as designed, mostly."

135 DAYS

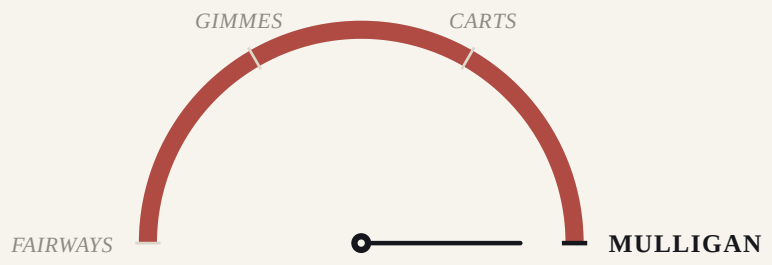

The count. One independent tracker records 135 confirmed golf days in the first 598 days of the second term, about one day in every 4.4, the latest at Bedminster on September 7 [1]. Obama's 333 rounds took eight years [2]. The same tracker, using a Government Accountability Office figure of $3.4 million per trip to Mar-a-Lago, estimates about $78.2 million for 23 Florida trips [1].

And the course. In July 2025 he flew to Scotland, visiting Turnberry and Aberdeenshire, where his family business's new course opened to the public on August 13 [3]. The promise was no time for golf. The tracker has the time, down to the day.

REPUBLICAN

MULLIGAN

The promise, from a rally in August 2016: "I'm going to be working for you. I'm not going to have time to go play golf. Believe me" [1]. It sat beside a standard he set for others; in October 2014 he wrote: "Can you believe that, with all of the problems and difficulties facing the U.S., President Obama spent the day playing golf" [2].

The fair defense of the golf is that presidents golf, and they golf a lot. CBS's Mark Knoller counted 333 rounds for Barack Obama over eight years [3]. A president on a course is still a president, with the phone in the cart. By that measure, golf is a presidential tradition, and this president is keeping it. A mulligan is a do-over you award yourself, and the question is only how many.

“I wrote down the promise in 2016: "I'm not going to have time to go play golf. Believe me." Then the tweet from 2014 about his predecessor, "with all of the problems and difficulties facing the U.S." Then I asked my brother-in-law, who golfs, to help me with a tracker somebody keeps online: a hundred thirty-five days in five hundred ninety-eight. He said that's a better schedule than he's got, and he's retired. Sorry, you've got a tee time, I'll be quick. The man who said he wouldn't have time — where did the time come from?” — Lou

“"I'm going to be working for you. I'm not going to have time to go play golf. Believe me." Somebody's keeping count: a hundred thirty-five golf days in five hundred ninety-eight, one day in four and a half. And in 2014 he was tweeting that Obama spent a day playing golf "with all of the problems and difficulties facing the U.S." A mulligan is a do-over you give yourself. He gave himself the whole promise.”

“The president does his best thinking on the course, which means the golf days are working days and the working days are, if anything, the days off, so by that math he's been on the job about a hundred thirty-five days more than his critics.”
