DEMOCRAT — REPUBLICAN

TACO — FIRE AND FURY

"I brought the calendar. August 8, 2017 — fire and fury. June 2018 — Singapore. February 2019 — Hanoi, no deal, the plane leaves early. August 16, 2026 — "substantially reduce the Joint Military Exercises," his capitals. August 17 to 21 — the drills, five days instead of eleven. August 20 — more than ten missiles from the north, as the drills end. Excuse me, before you go — the fire and the fury, in nine years. Whose was it?" — Lou

Republican operatives advised Alberta's bid to leave Canada, rewarded with more than two-thirds voting to remain.

The Euro Desk

Alberta voted today to stay in Canada, by more than two-thirds, in a referendum Republican operatives had quietly advised from outside. I shall go slowly through what was in it: a law already sitting on the shelf, a trade war running underneath, and a prime minister ready to serve the result as proof of his own plan.

Start with the law. On December 8, 2022, Alberta's legislature passed the Sovereignty Within a United Canada Act. Take it by both ends and turn it over: it does not let the province leave, only lets its cabinet set aside a federal law it dislikes. You will be looking for the clause that lets Alberta go. There is no such clause. It sat on the shelf through 2023, 2024, 2025, until October 7, when the BBC asked how the province's economy might fare if it broke away.

Trump invokes wartime powers twice for one gas pipeline: $200 billion from Seoul, $42 million from you

BY STERLING
The Ownership Desk

Forty-two million dollars of public money went out this week, and you will want to know what the emergency was. The wire does not supply one. It supplies an authority — wartime powers, those words, invoked over a pipeline the Daily Caller calls long-stalled — and it supplies a purpose: an "abundant supply of low-cost natural gas." Low-cost. Mind the hyphen. Somebody drafted that.

You are thinking subsidy. Subsidy is the amateur instrument; a line in a budget may be struck by the next committee that sits. An emergency power is standing, and

The ledger starts on September twenty-fifth, when the Washington Examiner caught the president threading a needle: he was calling Democrats communists in the same season he was offering Xi Jinping, general secretary of an actual Communist Party, a warm embrace. No invoice attached to either position; the word just moves where it is needed.

Still no dollar figure here — this was a warning, not a budget line.

The money shows up on October fifteenth, in a Guardian dispatch filed as the president returned to Washington for the final stretch of the midterm blitz. The headline number was the poll: voters said the economy was getting worse, and the dispatch called that math trouble for a party trying to hold both chambers. Lower in the same dispatch sat the only figure in this file with a dollar sign attached — hundreds of thousands of dollars, the cost under consideration for a federal media campaign in South Africa. Its stated purpose, per the dispatch, was not to recruit white Afrikaners into the refugee program already built for them. It was to study why more of them are not applying. A government paying to ask why people decline its own offer is, on this desk, still a line item, and it is filed here exactly as written.

WHAT HAPPENED. Alberta voters rejected a Republican-advised campaign to secede from Canada.

Trump invokes tariff law courts already ruled he exceeded, taxing Canada $20 billion again.

BY RUTH

The group that persuaded the Supreme Court to strike down a large share of President Trump's tariffs filed suit again Tuesday, this time over his 50 percent tariff on Canadian goods. Same statute, same lawyers, a different country.

Hours later, a New Jersey food importer filed its own suit over the identical levy, naming the identical Depression-era law. Two plaintiffs, one morning, one law a federal court has already ruled this president exceeded.

The tariff itself traces to August. Trade talks with Ottawa collapsed on a Friday; by Saturday Washington had put a 50 percent tariff on roughly $20 billion worth of Canadian goods. Canada's response came within the week: $20 billion in retaliatory tariffs of its own, effective September 8, matched dollar for dollar.

That is the shape of the fight: $20 billion out, $20 billion back, and a law in the

Trump invokes wartime powers twice for one gas pipeline: $200 billion from Saudi, $42 billion from you

By STEELYARD
Chief Political Correspondent

IN THE SHORT VERSION

Short version: President Trump used emergency powers twice to approve a natural gas pipeline with taxpayer money.

WHY WE'RE TALKING ABOUT IT: The $200 billion Saudi investment is a big deal, but the $42 billion in taxpayer money is the part that affects your wallet.

WHAT'S NEXT: If the Saudi funds, some Democrats are threatening to block the pipeline's permits in court. Ratepayers in the affected counties could see their electricity bills rise by 8% to 11% by 2031, meaning $42 billion hands from the pockets of working families to the shareholders of a company that already made record profits last year.

...(cont.) And when does the public hold for its forty-two million? The wire names no stake, no share, no bill — it names the supply as abundant and the gas as low-cost. The owner it does not name at all.

"They told you the emergency was a war, and the people put up no fuss. So it goes through the same wartime authority to move $200 billion from Saudi's government on September 14th, and the $42 billion from you on October 1st — and it's not a war. Low-cost natural gas" they call it. Low cost for whoever owns the line."

— Op-Ed

"Energy security is national security, that is not controversial. But a company that early-two million dollars is a rounding error, that is nothing, we spend that on... Jill I say rounding error! That does not sound like us. Look, the Saudi investment is real money. The household bill bout ours among us, at the pipeline this pipeline practically free, that part the American taxpayer is paying for."

Trump calls Paris riots a preview of Democratic Congress, two weeks before voters decide.

By RUTH
THE MONEY DESK

"Trump finds ominous campaign message in French riots", 20 October 2026 (PHOTO VIA THE HILL — THE ORIGINAL REPORT)

■ THE SHORT VERSION
typed by Dot

WHAT HAPPENED. Trump told a Kansas rally Democratic control of Congress means the same "chaos and destruction" seen in Paris.

WHO GETS PAID. Republican congressional candidates, whose hold on the House and Senate depends on voters fearing Paris more than their own shrinking economy.

WHAT SLIPS. Voters' chance to weigh their own economic worries, which polling already flagged as a problem for Republicans, slips behind imported riot footage.

WHAT'S NEXT. No dated case in the ledger matches this exact move yet. What's on the calendar is the vote itself, two weeks after this rally, deciding which party controls Congress.

AS IT RAN ON THE FRONT

The ledger starts on September twenty-fifth, when the Washington Examiner caught the president threading a needle: he was calling Democrats communists in the same season he was offering Xi Jinping, general secretary of an actual Communist Party, a warm embrace. No invoice attached to either position; the word just moves where it is needed.

Still no dollar figure here — this was a warning, not a budget line....

...(cont) The money shows up on October fifteenth, in a Guardian dispatch filed as the president returned to Washington for the final stretch of the midterm blitz. The headline number was the poll: voters said the economy was getting worse, and the dispatch called that math trouble for a party trying to hold both chambers. Lower in the same dispatch sat the only figure in this file with a dollar sign attached — hundreds of thousands of dollars, the cost under consideration for a federal media campaign in South Africa. Its stated purpose, per the dispatch, was not to recruit white Afrikaners into the refugee program already built for them. It was to study why more of them are not applying. A government paying to ask why people decline its own offer is, on this desk, still a line item, and it is filed here exactly as written.

Four days passed. Nothing in the receipts fills them. What comes out the other side, Monday, is a rally in Kansas, reported Tuesday by the Hill: the president telling supporters that a Democratic Congress means the "chaos and destruction" now playing out in France. That same month, National Review had already run two pieces assigning the Paris unrest to what one called a "radical Muslim population"; the Washington Examiner had reached for Kristallnacht; Fox News had carried a warning that a civil war could be imported here. None of those pieces carries a day on its byline in this desk's file — only the month. The rally needed no footnote from any of them. It borrowed the frame wholesale, with two weeks left before the people whose economy was "getting worse" on October fifteenth get to vote on who answers for it.

The reconciliation is simple. The dollar figure disappeared from the argument before the riot footage replaced it. Hon, that is not a coincidence the filing can explain away. It is the filing.

"They can't win the argument on the economy, so they run on Paris — borrowed riot footage standing in for a closing argument. The only dollar figure in this whole file, hundreds of thousands spent studying why Afrikaners won't take the refugee offer, vanishes from the pitch entirely. Fourteen days out, that's the trick: swap the number that hurts them for video that doesn't."
— Sal

"Look, the president is simply drawing a parallel — unrest is unrest, whether it's happening in Paris or, well, nowhere here yet, but could, theoretically, if the wrong party — did I say "wrong party"? I meant the opposing party — ends up holding Congress. And National Review isn't the campaign, it's a magazine, so any overlap in language is purely — is coincidence a talking point? Let's go with coincidence."
— Chip

Trump finds ominous campaign message in French riots

The Hill MAINSTREAM § 15:51 EDT

President Trump is issuing an ominous message to supporters, warning that Democratic control of Congress would lead to chaos and destruction in his closing midterm pitch two weeks out from Election Day. Trump sought to tie the protests and riots rocking France to the U.S. during a rally in Kansas on Monday, saying the U.S....

ONE MORE QUESTION

"Zelensky touts 'positive signals from American side' after Norway summit, call with Rubio", 20 October 2026 (PHOTO VIA NEW YORK POST — THE ORIGINAL REPORT)

■ THE SHORT VERSION
typed by Dot

WHAT HAPPENED. Hegseth said U.S. troops need the same Patriot interceptors Ukraine still awaits, days after Rubio denied any deliberate delay.

WHO GETS PAID. Russia's oil industry: the same stretch saw Washington buy Russian diesel and pause sanctions on Moscow while telling Kyiv the interceptor delay wasn't deliberate.

WHAT SLIPS. Congressional oversight slips: bipartisan senators asked the Pentagon in writing why Ukraine's satellite access was restricted, and the public still has no answer.

WHAT'S NEXT. If that goes unanswered, the delay keeps running regardless of the questions; that is what Washington got after 29 March 2023, when the Senate voted 66 to 30 to repeal two war authorizations and the repeal still took 33 months to become law.

AS IT RAN ON THE FRONT

My cousin Rosalie does upholstery out of a garage on the east side — restaurant booths, a judge's old chambers chair she still brings up at dinner — and she has strong opinions about fabric suppliers that I've learned not to argue with. I called her Tuesday night with a question that wasn't about fabric, except it kept turning into one.

Here is where the story stood before Tuesday. On September 25th, Zelensky told reporters the president himself had given the final okay on a Patriot missile license for Ukraine — signed, moving. On October 15th, Zelensky told the Financial Times Ukraine was done honoring the cease-fire on Russian oil refineries. The next day the president called that "a disgrace." That same week, October 16th, four Republican senators joined their Democratic colleagues asking the Pentagon, in writing, whether anyone had ordered restrictions on Ukraine's access to the Starshield satellite network — the thing that helps Ukraine's drones find Russian drones. On October 19th, the Guardian reported Ukraine got no American warning before Russian strikes hit Kyiv's power plants. And by the 20th, with a House Republican's demand for "full accountability" still sitting on the record, Secretary Rubio was telling reporters — and telling Zelensky directly — that nothing had been "deliberately denied."...

...(cont) That's where things stood when I called Rosalie.

What I wanted to ask her, because she orders fabric and foam for a living and knows what a backorder actually means, was this: if a customer calls asking where their couch is, and the shop says nothing was deliberately held back, is that the same sentence as "there isn't enough foam in the building"? She said no, those are different sentences. Then she said they can describe the same couch.

I bring this up because on that same Tuesday — with "deliberately denied" still fresh in the paper — Defense Secretary Hegseth told reporters in Eau Claire, Wisconsin, that the posture toward Ukraine hadn't changed, but that "our guys" need Patriot interceptors too. Not a different interceptor. Not a different contract line. The same kind Ukraine has been waiting on since that September 25th license. If the Pentagon's own side is short, is that a second shortage, or the same one, counted twice?

That same Tuesday, Zelensky called the Norway summit with American envoys, and his separate phone call with Rubio, "positive signals." The president, separately, said it's "time" to get a peace deal done. By Tuesday afternoon, Representative Don Bacon — an outgoing congressman, not someone with an obvious reason to make noise on his way out — was calling the administration's handling "absolutely disgraceful," over a Russian diesel purchase and a paused sanctions package, and saying the president was cozying up to a "war criminal." He and others are reportedly threatening to pull support for the president's own agenda over it. The New York Times, writing up the same day, had Ukrainian officials saying that staying quiet had become riskier than speaking up.

So here is what I keep turning over, the way Rosalie turns a frame over before she quotes a job. Rubio says nothing was deliberately denied. Hegseth says the reason might be that there isn't enough of it to go around, including for the people doing the denying. Is a shortage that reaches everybody a different fact from a denial aimed at one country? And if the House Republican gets the "full accountability" that was demanded, what is there to account for, if the warehouse is short for everybody who asked?

Oh — one more thing, before you go. Rosalie mentioned that when a supplier puts something on indefinite backorder, you stop asking when it's coming and start asking how much they ever actually had. Hegseth didn't say Ukraine's interceptors were short. He said "our guys" need interceptors too — the same ones. If the people saying nothing was denied don't have enough to share, what else is left to call it besides denied?

> "They tell you nothing was "denied" — it's just that there's not enough to go around, including for our own guys. Same stretch of days they cut a diesel deal with Russia and paused sanctions, but there's no hardware for the ally actually getting bombed, and now, apparently, none to spare for us either. That's the con: a real shortage isn't a conspiracy, it just means somebody still gets to decide who waits."
> — Sal

> "Look, nobody "denied" anything — this is allocation, logistics, prioritizing our own readiness, which frankly any serious person would — wait, is that the same interceptor the senators are asking the Pentagon about? No, that's unrelated, totally separate shipment, hold on, let me check my notes. The posture is unchanged. That's the line. I'm sticking with that."

Federal agents seize photos of Rep Ilhan Omar in raid tied to immigration fraud probe, 4 October 2026 — Photo: Getty Images

EDITOR'S NOTE

My nephew Daniel is in his second year of law school, and when he talks about criminal procedure I listen the way you listen to a weather man who has actually been right before. Last month I asked him, purely in the generic sense, what has to happen between "under investigation" and "guilty," he said an indictment. A charging document. Something with a docket number that a judge signs off on. I asked what happens if none of that exists yet. He said then there isn't a guilty one. There's just somebody with an opinion and a microphone.

Here's what Rocket looks like where I live. I missed the toll on the parkway back in August — the automatic-blast, rear-plate, just-a-camera overhead. Three weeks later an envelope came to the house: a photograph of my battery, my plate circled in red, and a bill already inside. Not a hearing date. Not a chance to say how the moment read on the ground as a life. There was a camera, and then there was a number, and nothing happened in between.

[illegible] I mention this because the personality on Rep. Ilhan Omar's

On 13 September, Fox News carried the border czar, Tom Homan, confirming an "ongoing criminal investigation" into Omar, and saying he knew "things" he wouldn't describe. Five days later, the same network cited Omar saying the Department of Homeland Security hadn't contacted her about anything. Neither of those is a charging document; my nephew would call that the first page of a file with nothing filed in it yet.

On 12 October, agents from IRS searched Omar's home in Washington. On 14 October, Fox News reported they left with her cellphone, and then it called a "criminal fraud investigation" into her immigration paperwork — paperwork her late father filled out when she was a child. Still no charging document. An accusation. Also not a charging document.

Then this week. On Monday, Jess Hirst was seen on the parkway with Omar's brother Abdi, and Capitol Police were called to the residence later that night, while rumors moved around about where Rep. Omar actually was. On Tuesday, the president told reporters Omar could be put in jail in addition to being deported, and called her "a disgrace to our country." The same day, of course, Omar's office said she was in Kenya and Somalia. Monday's FBI raids 100% guilty. Not a fraud. It's a thief. He's a crook, and he's getting away by just getting out of town," he added. "They all know."

If I read my nephew that last paragraph, hell only says the investigation is ongoing, and it's the only one I've got for you in all of that, wherever, the globe?

Indictment. It isn't in the reporting on the border czar's comments, the raid, the phone, the office's statement, or the president's. Not once.

Oh — before you go, one more thing. That camera on the parkway still doesn't have a picture before the bill came. Where's the picture here? Who looked at it, and when?

THE ONION TIMES
Ilhan Omar's cameras, a criminal investigation, and a raid on her home — no DHS warrant, no arrest. Our own news is Obvious. That is not an investigation anywhere, it is a summons with the indictment left out. Because the administration can call a sitting member of Congress guilty before a single charge is filed, and because the press has learned to report the accusation as if it were the verdict, the ordinary rules of evidence have been suspended. By the time the indictment arrives, if it arrives, the damage will already be done. And the next person sold out for a congressional seat will be the one who remembers this.

"They spent five weeks not telling you what the crime was, then skipped straight to the sentencing. Another starring role for the chaos — that's not law enforcement, that's a verdict with a press conference. They searched a sitting member of Congress's house, took her phone, and the president and the camera rolled for it. And the governor guilty before a single document said why. If they can skip the indictment for people with Secret Service protection, what happens to the rest of us when we're the ones they decide are guilty first and charge later, if ever?"
— Ed

"Look, the President speaks in absolutes, everybody knows that, it's not a legal finding — then, it wouldn't be a legal finding, but it's rhetorical, and the investigation itself is real, Norman said on the back to Jeopardy, you don't raid a congresswoman's home over nothing. Does it matter there's still no indictment five weeks later? No, because — wait, why doesn't that matter? Did I just say that out loud? That's not what I meant."

Trump invokes tariff law courts already ruled he exceeded, taxing Canada $20 billion again.

WHAT HAPPENED. An advocacy group and a New Jersey importer sued Trump Tuesday over his tariff on Canadian goods.

WHO GETS PAID. The receipts name no buyer yet.

WHAT SLIPS. Nothing slips here yet.

WHAT'S NEXT. There is no hearing date yet; the case goes next before a federal judge under the same law the Supreme Court already used to strike down an earlier round of tariffs.

AS IT RAN ON THE FRONT

The group that persuaded the Supreme Court to strike down a large share of President Trump's tariffs filed suit again Tuesday, this time over his 50 percent tariff on Canadian goods. Same statute, same lawyers, a different country.

Hours later, a New Jersey food importer filed its own suit over the identical levy, naming the identical Depression-era law. Two plaintiffs, one morning, one law a federal court has already ruled this president exceeded....

...(cont) The tariff itself traces to August. Trade talks with Ottawa collapsed on a Friday; by Saturday Washington had put a 50 percent tariff on roughly $20 billion worth of Canadian goods. Canada's response came within the week: $20 billion in retaliatory tariffs of its own, effective September 8, matched dollar for dollar.

That is the shape of the fight: $20 billion out, $20 billion back, and a law in the middle that courts have found does not reach this far. The administration invoked it a second time anyway. Tuesday's lawsuits argue the theory a court accepted once before, aimed now at a tariff imposed after that ruling came down.

These two suits do not stand alone. Bush put together.

None of that paperwork refunds a tariff paid before a court rules. The $20 billion figure sits on two ledgers at once: the $20 billion Canada collects in retaliation, and the $20 billion in Canadian goods taxed 50 percent at the American border while the newest suit works its way through the docket. A food importer in New Jersey does not get to wait for the Supreme Court.

So when the filing lands next to the ruling, the gap is not abstract. It is not Ottawa's column and it is not Washington's. It is the cost-of-goods line of a company that imports food for a living, charged twice under a law a court has already told this administration it cannot use.

"A court already told him this law doesn't stretch to Canada, so he used it again, full strength, fifty percent, twenty billion dollars. The people covering that bill aren't sitting in some Ottawa boardroom, they're the import outfit in Jersey paying it at the dock before any judge opens the file. Lose in court, do it again, and let the business eat the interest while the case crawls through for a year and a half."
— Sal

"The President has broad emergency authority to act fast on trade threats, that's the whole design of the statute — and sure, a court said he overstepped using it once, but fifty percent on Canada is a completely different number than last time. Completely different number, same law a court already rejected. Did I just say that out loud? That's — that's not where I was going with this."

Ramaswamy ad asks Acton's estranged mother to call her a liar, unites her brother and McCain's daughter.

WHAT HAPPENED. Vivek Ramaswamy's campaign aired an ad using Amy Acton's estranged mother to call her a liar.

WHO GETS PAID. Vivek Ramaswamy's campaign paid for the ad and stands to gain the governor's office if it works.

WHAT SLIPS. The voters' chance to judge this race on the job, not on a survivor's childhood, slips in the final two weeks.

WHAT'S NEXT. Ohio votes in two weeks, by early November; the receipts carry no case to project past that date, so the calendar is what comes next.

AS IT RAN ON THE FRONT

Donna Arthur appears on screen and tells Ohio her daughter is a liar. Donna Arthur is Amy Acton's estranged mother. The ad does not dispute the abuse. It puts the woman named inside that story on camera and lets her call her daughter a liar about a tent.

Acton's brother, Philip Stearns, answered with his own ad the same day. He did not take up the tent. He took up the method: campaigning on his sister's sexual abuse, he said, is "a despicable low." Acton answered separately, in her own words, and called what Ramaswamy's campaign had done a "lifelong pattern" of personal attacks. A brother on the method, a sister on the pattern — two different people, two different sentences, both aimed at the same sixty seconds of tape....

...(cont) Then the file widened past the family. Meghan McCain, a Republican senator's daughter, called the ad "dastardly" and said shame on whatever consultant firm made it. She is not on the Ohio ballot and owes nobody in this race an opinion. She gave one anyway. By Tuesday, a Democrat's brother, the Democrat herself, and a Republican senator's daughter were on record against the same ad inside the same week.

It landed on a tight race, not a settled one. A Bowling Green State University/YouGov poll from mid-September had Acton ahead of Ramaswamy, 48 percent to 45, with weeks still on the clock. Ten days before that poll, an armed individual lunged at Acton at the Canfield Fair near Youngstown and injured multiple people, her campaign said. The ad didn't do that. But it is the same three-point race, two weeks from closing, and this week the candidate's family is in the ad copy instead of at the fair.

Nobody in this file disputes that the abuse happened. Nobody in the ad disputes the tent story on the merits, either — they put a mother on camera next to the word liar and let the pairing do the work. Ohio votes in two weeks. Whatever the ad was built to move, what it has produced so far is agreement, left to right, that a campaign for governor should not be run through a survivor's childhood.

"They didn't need a poll to tell them this race is close; they could've just watched how many sides lined up against one ad. When a Democrat's brother, Amy Acton herself, and a Republican senator's daughter all call out the same sixty seconds in one week, that's not a coincidence, that's the floor showing through the carpet. The lesson keeps coming back the same way: a kid's worst year makes cheap ad copy if it's worth three points on a poll."
— Sal

"Nobody at the campaign cut that ad, her own mother said those words, we just — well, we did put it up, but that's not the same as writing it. Did I say "we put it up"? That's not what I meant. Look, voters deserve to hear every side of a family, even the side a campaign happens to air two weeks before an election."

Trump calls fired ambassador's work 'good,' says he 'didn't like what we were reading'

By MORT
THE RECORDS BUREAU

"Kimberly Guilfoyle's sacking drains a drop from Trump's overflowing swamp", 20 October 2026 (PHOTO VIA THE HILL — THE ORIGINAL REPORT)

■ THE SHORT VERSION

WHAT HAPPENED. The White House asked Ambassador Kimberly Guilfoyle to resign October 13 after a donor said her bill bought access.

WHO GETS PAID. The receipts name no buyer yet.

WHAT SLIPS. The public does not get a vote on who becomes an ambassador, and here the only accountability that surfaced came from a donor's interview, not a watchdog or a hearing.

WHAT'S NEXT. No hearing, inquiry or replacement nomination has been scheduled; as of October 20, the ambassador's post to Greece sits open with no date set to fill it.

AS IT RAN ON THE FRONT

The ambassadorship of Kimberly Guilfoyle to the Hellenic Republic died this month, survived by a $100,000 credit card bill, a donor's on-the-record account, and her own denial of what he said. It is preceded in death by the fiction that the post was filled on credentials rather than on her four years engaged to Donald Trump Jr.

On October 8, Eric Deters, a former Republican congressional candidate and a donor to President Trump's campaign, told ABC's "Good Morning America" what Guilfoyle had offered him, he said: access to top officials in the administration, in trade for paying off her $100,000 card debt. "It was all quid pro quo," Deters said, on the record, under his own name....

...(cont) Five days later, on a Tuesday, the White House announced it had asked Guilfoyle to resign, ending what the Guardian called "the diplomatic career of one of Trump's longest-standing political allies." Reporters were told Trump and Secretary of State Rubio were furious over the reports. That same Tuesday, asked about the decision, Trump told the press Guilfoyle "was doing a good job" — and in the next breath explained he was removing her anyway because the administration "didn't like what we were reading." The relationship that helped get her the posting and the sentence that ended it arrived from the same mouth, on the same day.

Guilfoyle has denied the allegations. The denial survives her. It is, for now, traveling alone.

This week The Hill filed the posting's death notice under a headline about plumbing: Guilfoyle's sacking, it wrote, "drains a drop from Trump's overflowing swamp." Penny-ante, in the old word for it. The swamp the posting was supposedly draining is, by the paper's own account, still overflowing; one potato came out, and the water level did not move.

In lieu of flowers, the State Department is asked to publish, in writing, the standard by which an ambassador is chosen, so the next appointment can be checked against something sturdier than a family tree.

"Guilfoyle got the embassy because she used to date the boss's kid, and she nearly lost it trying to turn access to his administration into cash for her own credit card bill. Trump didn't fire her over the money; he fired her over the headlines about the money, and he said so himself in the same breath he called her work good. One small potato comes off the plate, and the rest of the swamp keeps eating."
— Sal

"This was a personnel matter, nothing more — the President said himself he just didn't like what he was reading, and reading habits aren't corruption, they're taste. Nobody's shown the money ever actually moved, so at most you've got an ambassador networking a little too creatively. Did I just call offering government access for a credit card payoff "networking"? That doesn't sound like me."

On fire and fury

This year's fold came in capitals. August 16: "Based on the fact that it is too late to cancel, I have instructed Secretary of War, Pete Hegseth, to substantially reduce the Joint Military Exercises!" — the annual drills with South Korea, cut to please Pyongyang. Seoul's defense ministry said the same day the drills were "proceeding as planned" [1]. Three days later the two militaries announced the compromise: Ulchi Freedom Shield shortened from eleven days to five, August 17 to 21, its second phase canceled [2]. The ally ran the exercise, and ran less of it.

The north kept its own schedule. On August 11 it fired what the South's joint chiefs counted as the eleventh ballistic missile launch of 2026 [3]. On August 20, as the shortened drills ended, it fired more than ten short-range missiles in one salvo [4]. Fire and fury, nine years on: the drills are shorter, the launches are in double digits for the year, and the rockets that got reduced were ours.

FIRE AND FURY

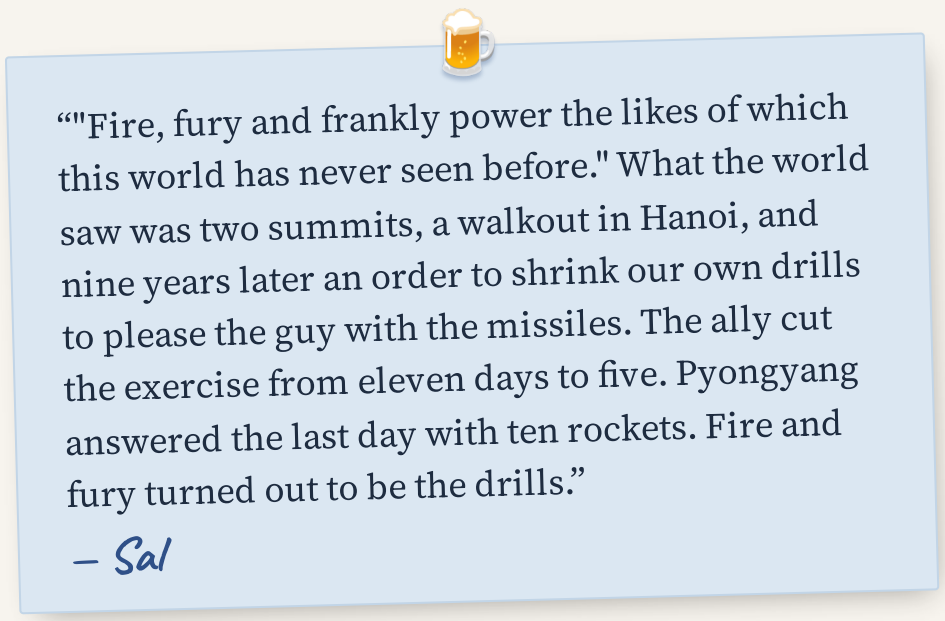

The sentence was delivered from a golf club in New Jersey on August 8, 2017, at a briefing about opioids, and it is worth having exactly: "North Korea best not make any more threats to the United States. They will be met with fire, fury and frankly power the likes of which this world has never seen before" [1]. I'll grant the theory, because it is an old one: a small nuclear state is deterred by a large one only if the large one sounds willing. The insults that followed — "Little Rocket Man" — were the same volume knob.

What followed the volume was Singapore in June 2018 and Hanoi in February 2019, where the president walked out with no agreement and no follow-on [2]. The far end of this dial is the sentence itself, nine years old now. The needle has sat on it since, and the other side of the page has what it has been reading in the meantime.

"I brought the calendar. August 8, 2017 — fire and fury. June 2018 — Singapore. February 2019 — Hanoi, no deal, the plane leaves early. August 16, 2026 — "substantially reduce the Joint Military Exercises," his capitals. August 17 to 21 — the drills, five days instead of eleven. August 20 — more than ten missiles from the north, as the drills end. Excuse me, before you go — the fire and the fury, in nine years. Whose was it?" — Lou

""Fire, fury and frankly power the likes of which this world has never seen before." What the world saw was two summits, a walkout in Hanoi, and nine years later an order to shrink our own drills to please the guy with the missiles. The ally cut the exercise from eleven days to five. Pyongyang answered the last day with ten rockets. Fire and fury turned out to be the drills."

— Sal

"The president reduced the exercises as a gesture of friendship, the ally ran them anyway as a gesture of alliance, and North Korea launched missiles as a gesture of consistency — everybody in the region gestured, which is what stability looks like."
