The Supreme Court found ninety days enough room to run a voter-purge database and twelve days too few to read a student ID.

Set the week on a table and it reconciles. Five items. Two are orders of the Court. Two are on file at the Federal Election Commission. The fifth is a plan reported in September. Nothing in the stack is concealed and nothing in it is unlawful. That is the part to say first, flat, before anything else, because it is what the stack is for.

Item one. On September 25th the Court, six to three, lifted a lower court's block and let the Department of Homeland Security run its SAVE database against state voter rolls through the appeal. Federal law otherwise keeps a program like that out of the final ninety days before an election. Ninety days is the quiet period. The Court looked at the ninety days and found room in them.

Item two. …

ASK VIVIAN · THE LETTER OF THE WEEK

Dear Vivian,

I am resigned to the president setting up some sort of coup to steal the midterm elections. What's the reality? What can he actually do to take this country down to a total authoritarian system of government?

— Resigned in Reading

Dear Resigned,

Sugar, I do not do resignation; I do inventory. So here is what he has actually tried, what has held, and the doors that are still open, all dated.

Picture a cup of gumbo. Not a bowl, a cup, light on the rice, and hold the cracker. That is the order as CBS News reported it, and a man named Charlie Hicks placed it at the Shrimp Basket in Pensacola, Florida, at lunch, and then placed it again at dinner, every day, for ten years. Seventy-eight years old. Twice a day. The chef, Donell Stallworth, put it to CBS News in five words you will want to keep: "Mr. Hicks don't miss no days."

Musk, this midterm's largest known donor at $276 million, spent three days saying the 100 mph limit on Ukraine's air defense was the government's call — the second time in one week the ceiling belonged to somebody else. A county coroner confirmed the measles death; the federal agency that certified measles eliminated in 2000 by counting has called the cause under investigation since 1 September. "Eight pieces of good news, in order. The Court found ninety days of room to run SAVE against the state rolls, six to three, and twelve days too few to read a student ID — less time is tighter, and tight is what you want on an ID. Second, French students went out over rats and falling debris in their schools, nearly two thousand schools closed, and the footage played at our rallies. One Saturday's arrests were filed at 135, then nearly 1,000, which I'd call a correction in the direction of accuracy. Third, Mr. Musk said the throttle on Ukraine's battlefield internet was the President's and the military's, then said Saturday it was SpaceX's and lifted it; the only man with the switch has cleared us. Fourth, three ceasefires in one month, off the sanctions we waived the week before — the sanctions we signed and then waived the — strike that: we signed the Act on the 19th. Fifth, the Department asked a court to stop Alaska's certification only if the senator loses, and challenged zero ballots, which is zero ballots in dispute, and that is a clean race. Sixth, $276 million from one donor, no rule on the books in the road, a $400 million edge, and three days of him putting the 100 mph limit on Ukraine's air defense on us. Seventh, the coroner confirmed the measles death, the agency is still investigating, and we certified measles eliminated in 2000 by counting. Eighth, half-price beer moved the crowd through security early at Neyland, where the President sold a bill the players could not vote on. All of it on the record. Note the transparency."

ARTICLE CONTINUES BELOW

School funding, the stated cause of the French student protests, died on 18 October at the age of twelve days. It is survived by a Kansas rally, by French protest footage shown at American midterm rallies, and by a ballot on 3 November.

It was born in difficult circumstances, as these things usually are. Democracy Now! reported on 4 October that nearly 2,000 French high schools were blockaded or closed, and that the movement had begun in September at a single school in the overcrowded peripheral suburbs of Paris, where students protested teacher shortages, overcrowded classrooms and dilapidated bathrooms and rats and falling debris. That is the shit the children were marching about, and it is the part that did not travel.…

…[cont'd] It was preceded in the booth by themselves. Morning Star counted around 400 of them closed on 2 October. The same paper reported on 9 October that students had dragged rubbish bins into position outside the Hélene Boucher Lycee in north-east Paris on the previous morning, erecting barricades before police moved in with tear gas, and that police had made more than 4,600 arrests since late September, when the protests began. The arrested were most of them under 18.

For a while the cause outgrew the schools without losing its name. Common Dreams reported on 6 October that students had led more than 250,000 people in protests demanding education funding, with Clémence Guetté, a deputy of the French National Assembly, saying "we are going to sweep away the old world." On 17 October the same outlet counted demonstrations in 140 cities over inequality, the cost of living and school conditions. A protester identified as Agent told Agence France-Presse: "For years we've had climate, economy, and equality problems, but the government is not doing anything about it."

The replacement cause was already in print. On 10 October the New York Post ran a column arguing the protests were "really about a growing radical Muslim population that wants to get rid of democracy."

On 18 October the Washington Examiner reported President Trump urging Europeans to back

ON A MORE QUESTION

What a country pays for running its war on a network it doesn't own.

Now, my qualifications. There's a light in my garage on a switch by the side door and a breaker in the panel behind the water heater. Two weeks this fall I hit that switch and got nothing, and I told my wife the power company was doing something to the street. The power company did not know I was alive. It throws the breaker myself with the end of a ladder. Two weeks of blaming the utility for my own elbow — and the whole two weeks, I was the only man in the country who could walk back there and push it up. Is that the same shape as this, or does it change when it's satellites?

Because on the third, the Times reported the founder of SpaceX joining a Pentagon advisory board, billions of dollars in military contracts to his name, this month a report put his midterms spend at a $billion scale, the largest of the cycle. Senator Tillis asked him that Wednesday to explain the overnight disruptions, and said he hoped it was an error and not a deliberate decision. Zelensky said, "It's a pity that we are losing a strong partner," and by the seventeenth said Starshield was still restricted and called it a "planned operation" to hurt Kyiv.

The Times reported the president asked him to reverse the limits. Friday, the BBC had the soldiers still restricted. The president was in Sioux City that week with $150 million for gas and diesel, and he'd blamed Ukraine's strikes on Russian refineries for the price — but that's not my page. The twentieth: the Wall Street Journal reported, and The Hill confirmed, that he had ordered the slowdown himself.

Excuse me — before you go. I'm sorry. There was one more page and I've been hunting it since I sat down. Glovebox, probably. No — here. Saturday: he said "spacex" and by the seventeenth said Starshield and the order strikes, and the cap came off that same day. So Wednesday's page says the U.S. military and, ultimately, the president. Saturday's page says SpaceX. You do this every day: which of the two took the limit off on a Saturday, and whose hand was that on the switch?

Starlink access in Ukraine fully back after disruption: Officials', 24 October 2026 (PHOTOGRAPH BY [illegible] / THE EVENING EDITION)

AS FAR AS THE EYE CAN SEE FROM THE FRONT

I'm asking a favor, because this is your field and it is nowhere near mine. You people do satellites and contracts and the work. I've got one week of it in my coat and I cannot make it sit flat — four readings in the car, and the car needs a fan belt, so believe me there was time. Straighten me out and I'll get out of your way.

I wrote this down. Just a second. Ah, here it is....

...[CUT] The Guardian, Wednesday the fourteenth: Ukrainian soldiers in combat "have suddenly had their access to Starlink satellite internet terminals restricted." Tuesday evening, the paper says. Serhii Beskrestnov, an adviser to President Zelensky, wrote on Telegram that the limits came without warning, and the Washington Examiner printed his account: the restrictions applied to Starshield, and to terminals moving above 100 mph. The Examiner also reported some drone operations were cancelled.

Here's my first snag. Same day — Wednesday, I've got it circled twice — the Examiner carries the owner of SpaceX on who did it. "Starshield systems are owned and controlled by the US government." The Hill, the same Wednesday: decisions to restrict the speed or usage of Starshield are made by the U.S. military and, ultimately, the president. France 24 ran it. The Post will be pointed to Trump. So on Wednesday the switch is Washington's. And I read the whole day void read it?

Thursday, the BBC: "Musk says US government may be behind slowdown of Ukraine drone speed." May be. The BBC reports Ukraine says access has improved but it is still facing speed limits which are disrupting its battlefield "missions." The Times that Thursday called it a Pentagon-funded satellite internet program that "appeared to be curbed without warning," and the AP that it was reporting cut power to 600,000 people in Kyiv. CBS had Ukrainian officials saying the usual warning never came. That's four desks reading off one page — the Guardian, Common Dreams, CBS, the Times — and Common Dreams had already asked on the Wednesday what a country pays for running its war on a network it doesn't own.

Because on the third, the Times reported the founder of SpaceX joining a Pentagon advisory board, billions of dollars in military contracts to his name; this month a report put his midterms spend at a $billion scale, the largest of the cycle. Justice Department asks a court to block Alaska's Senate certification only if the Republican loses, challenging zero ballots

By WITHERSTEIN
THE EVENING EDITION

LAST UPDATED OCTOBER 11, 2024

"Did this lawsuit to block results in Alaska Senate race after the Dan Sullivan's lead on Election Night?" in October 2024
MULTIPLE CHOICE QUESTION — THEEVENING.NEWS

You will want to know which ballots the Department of Justice has a quarrel with. It is a fair question, and the filing that came out of Washington on Friday declines to answer it. The number of Alaska ballots challenged is zero. Zero — no precinct named in the complaint, and no stack of absentee envelopes in it either. What is pleaded instead is conditional: that if the Republican, Sullivan, runs sitting above the other on the Senate line, one of them the sitting senator and the other a retired schoolteacher, and a voter at a booth with a pen and two identical names under it.

And the relief sought? That a court stop Alaska from certifying the Senate race if that happens. Sullivan loses. If he loses. The drafting puts a condition precedent on the remedy — the event that must occur before the obligation arises — and the event is a defeat. Should the senator finish ahead, the two names trouble nobody and the certificate goes out on time. The quarrel is not with a ballot, you see. It is with a result.

…[cont'd] This did not arrive on Friday out of nothing. On September 2nd the Department of Homeland Security opened what it calls, internally, the Unlawful Voter Initiative: hundreds of agents going through state voter rolls for names that should not be there. That same day the president stood at the White House microphones and went at the retired schoolteacher whose name the senator shares. Do note the order of those two.

By October 13th, a Tuesday, the Department had sent Los Angeles County a thumb drive with a handwritten password on it, and had asked a federal court to set aside twenty thousand ballots in that county before anyone finished counting them. Twenty thousand — re-counted and contested at once, which is quite a trick of sequencing. Two came this week's letter to counties across California, vowing that the Department will not "improperly" certify the election. Improperly. Attorney General Blanche chose the adverb, and it is a handsome one, because it concedes the category while reserving the judgment: there are proper ways to block an election, and the Department will say which ones they are.

There is supposed to be a custom about the timing. The New York Times observed on the 12th that the search of Representative Elan Omar's home fell inside the sixty-day window before a midterm, in which the Department has historically avoided investigative steps related to political candidates. Historically. A custom is not a statute; it binds whoever elects to be bound by it, and the Department has not elected to be bound.

Alaska's ranked-choice rules, and for what? Alaska certificate is the instrument that makes a count final — final being the whole point of a count, the moment after which the thing stops being an argument. In the Department's pleading, that finality now hangs on which man is ahead when the counting stops … and the thing is one Senate seat. One. The election is ten days long.

Elon Musk, this midterm's largest known donor at $276 million, spent three days saying the 100 mph limit on Ukraine's air defense was the government's call.

By MITCH
INVESTIGATIONS

AS IT RAN ON THE FRONT

The ceiling on what one person may put into one party came off this week, and nobody had to touch it.

On Monday the Times reported that Elon Musk is the largest known midterm donor in American political history, at $276 million. On September 22 the reported plan had been at least one hundred million; three weeks on the figure was nearly triple that, and not one rule on the books stood in the road. The money moves through America PAC, an outside group that disclosed its first spending of the cycle on September 3 — mail advertising. The party it funds goes into November with a $400 million edge....

...(cont) That is the first half of the week. The second half ran on a much smaller number.

On Monday in Warsaw, Zelensky said he had been surprised by Trump's "energy ceasefire" announcement, which went up as Russian drones hit Kyiv, and vowed to retaliate if strikes on Ukraine's power grid continued. ABC News put the arrangement plainly on Thursday: Trump declared a ceasefire, but both sides are still shooting.

Tuesday evening, Ukraine's access to Starlink was throttled without warning. Serhii Beskrestnov, an adviser to Zelensky on defense technology, wrote on Telegram that the restrictions apply to Starshield, SpaceX's military service, and limit terminals moving at speeds above 100 mph. Military missions were disrupted. Some drone operations were cancelled. Ukrainian officials told CBS News that the Starlink missile tracker failed that night, during a new wave of Russian strikes.

All together now, for the operative clause: the limit applies to terminals moving at speeds above 100 mph. Not terminals in the wrong country. Not terminals put to the wrong use. Terminals above a posted speed. That is not weather and it is not a fault; it is a setting, and a setting is something a person enters. The remainder of the week was spent on which person.

On Wednesday Musk answered in public: "Starshield systems are owned and controlled by the US government." Limits on speed or usage, he said, are decided by the US military and, ultimately, the president. Senator Thom Tillis of North Carolina had asked Musk to explain the overnight disruptions, expressing hope that the restriction was an error and not a deliberate decision. So a senator asked the contractor, and the contractor named the Pentagon, which funds the program. By Thursday the BBC had it in the same posture: Musk says the US government may be behind the slowdown of Ukraine's drone speeds. Three days, one direction, no name.

The question had a second half, and CBS News reported it that Wednesday: the administration may have withheld intelligence warnings to Ukraine about Russian attacks that killed 6 and cut power to 600,000 people. The Times reported the same Wednesday that officials say the United States continues to provide intelligence to Ukraine, while Ukrainian officials suspected the orders restricting their access "had come from Washington." Zelensky, on Wednesday: "It's a pity that we are losing a strong partner." By Thursday he said he felt "betrayed."

There is a stated reason for the pressure. Trump blames Ukraine's strikes on Russian energy targets for driving up diesel prices, and has pressed Kyiv to stop them ahead of the midterms. The diesel is real: on October 3 the Guardian found Joe Hamilton, who farms 2,500 acres of corn and soybeans in Indiana's Delaware county, facing a record bill for about 9,000 gallons as his soybean harvest began, with the Iran war stoking record prices. That is the sum of the arithmetic on offer — an Indiana fuel bill on one side, a speed threshold over Kyiv on the other, and $276 million moving through the mail in between.

Also on October 3, the administration's AI accord was described as establishing "Real Oversight – Without Creating a Regulatory Capture Regime."

Two ceilings were in the news this week. The one on money came off without a vote. The one that held was 100 mph.

A county coroner confirmed the measles death; the federal agency that certified measles eliminated in 2000 has called the cause under investigation since 1 September.

By THE WRECKING CREW
THE REMEDY DESK

AS IT RAN ON THE FRONT

Start with the gap in the table. Since 1 September the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's weekly outbreak update has gone out with two measles deaths in Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, missing from it, the agency saying it was still investigating the cause. The county coroner had already confirmed one of the two. The United States certified measles eliminated in 2000 by counting — a year with sustained transmission stopped — so the certificate and the blank line are the same instrument, one of them filled in.

That is the assignment, and it is a small one: a public count with a line withheld. The parts are sitting in other people's dockets....

...(cont) The planner's part is the emergency filing, and it was timed twice. On 24 September, opponents of Paramount's purchase of Warner Bros. Discovery asked Judge Araceli Martínez-Olguín for "an opportunity to be heard" before she ruled on a settlement Paramount had reached with a coalition of state attorneys general. Common Dreams reported on 10 October that a coalition of nonprofit groups and labor unions had filed, on Friday, an emergency petition against the Federal Communications Commission's repeal of the rule limiting consolidation among television broadcasters, stating that the 2-1 party-line decision was "plainly contrary to law" and violates core administrative law principles.[1] Administrative law principles are the hinge. A weekly surveillance report is an agency product too.

The muscle takes down the frame first. On 24 September Judge Timothy Kelly, appointed by President Trump, ordered the president to immediately restore access for CNN, MS NOW and Politico, finding the outlets had shown "a likelihood of success" on their due process claim. One day between the privilege theory and an order against it. Whatever a pending death count is, that week's record says a court can be asked to call it something other than a favor.

The tinkerer's part is a letter. On 22 September Senator John Curtis of Utah wrote the leaders of the Senate Judiciary Committee asking them to investigate business dealings and to subpoena two witnesses. The letter is the entire mechanism: one member, one standing committee, one compulsion power that exists whether or not it is used. That power does not run out when the subject is a county death certificate instead of a contract.

Why the agency's own line matters shows up in the same stretch of October. On 7 October ABC News estimated that companies backed financially by Donald Trump Jr. and Eric Trump had taken more than $6 billion in Pentagon contracts. By 10 October the story had been deleted and republished in a gutted version with an editor's note admitting errors; the Daily Caller's item carried the line "ABC deleted this article in less than 24 hours because it's false." A count kept by a news organization can come down inside a day. A count kept by the government is the one the public owns.

The pilot's part is delivery on a schedule, and the speed is available. The Washington Examiner reported on 29 September that Texas and Georgia had announced emergency measures on Monday against record diesel prices — the prices that had an Indiana corn and soybean farmer looking at a record bill for about 9,000 gallons the following week, when his harvest started. On 20 October preliminary results in Alberta showed more than two-thirds of voters choosing to remain in Canada, and the next day Prime Minister Mark Carney called it a "Great result for Canada." The number was published the day it existed and was answered the day after.

Assembled: an emergency petition into the right docket, the 24 September due-process ruling behind it, a standing committee's subpoena power available on one letter, and a count published the week it is known. A coroner in Lancaster County has done the county's share of the paperwork.

Half-price beer moved the crowd through security early for a president who came to Neyland to sell a bill none of the players below him could vote on.

THE SPORTS DESK

HOT MIC MOMENT

He says he wants real news, not fake news, like you, and the institutions behind him are busy making the distinction official.

GUS HIS SIDE

GUS: Ladies and gentlemen, the week began in a television studio rather than on a field. On the eighteenth of September, Kirk Herbstreit defended his network's decision to seat Senator Ted Cruz of Texas on College GameDay. "We had him on because they were going to be voting this week," Herbstreit told reporters. This reporter notes the candor.

GUS: Two days later The Hill placed the legislative spotlight squarely on the Senate, the House having gone out for the final two weeks of September, with final passage pending on a measure creating national rules for compensating college athletes and limiting transfers. Introduced in March, it had already traveled farther than any collegiate sports bill in the history of the Congress.

GUS: On Wednesday the twenty-third the White House confirmed the president's attendance, his first college football game since January's championship, in which Notre Dame defeated Miami. By Thursday the Examiner had it confirmed as well, the news broken by OutKick founder Clay Travis. In Knoxville the gates would open early with fifty percent off the beer, the gals in their orange arriving at an hour the ushers do not ordinarily work.

GUS: Saturday the twenty-sixth delivered pageantry of a kind this sport has rarely assembled — the new-look Air Force One low over Neyland, a roaring house, No. 1 Texas against the No. 14 Volunteers at noon. From that house the president vouched for the bill and credited Speaker Mike Johnson of Mississippi: "Mike Johnson's fantastic. And we actually had 78 votes, if you can believe it." Bipartisanship, he said, for the first time in a while.

GUS: ABC's audio dissolved into static, the Post having warned of possible disruptions; before boarding, the president told a reporter, "I want real news, not fake news, like you." Texas escaped, Colin Simmons recording five sacks and Raleek Brown scoring twice. Monday was final passage, the Senate's last chance before recessing into the lame-duck period, and the men in the helmets were the only people in that stadium whose pay the guest of honor had come to settle.

GUS: Nor did the schedule relent. At a Mobile rally on the third of October the president announced his return for No. 7 Alabama against No. 2 Georgia at Bryant-Denny on the tenth, one stop among several states ahead of the midterms. By the seventh, Fox reported Hurricane Isaias threatening that game and the Secret Service preparing; the Post called it a nightmare scenario.

TRUDY HER SIDE

Candor is one word for it. The Hill has that quote exactly as you ran it, and that same Friday The Nation's Elic Mystal argued the Texas senator's college-sports bill threatens athletes' labor rights. The pregame show booked the author. Nobody booked a player.

May, sugar. The Examiner says May, and the Examiner is also where 'the furthest a collegiate sports bill has ever gotten in Congress' comes from. March is where you file the things you cannot locate.

Indiana defeated Miami, per The Hill, and the ladies in orange can read a kickoff time as fast as you can read a program. The Post filed the discount as a tactic get them in early, because his presence typically means heightened security. Half price is a crowd-control line item.

Louisiana. Johnson is R-LA, and you have moved a man one state east and handed him a chamber The Hill says was out of session for the final two weeks of September. The seventy-eight you have right. The Speaker was not in the building, and neither was his chamber.

Every word of that sits on a receipt, which must be a strange feeling. Hold the frame: the beer was half off, the speech was about their compensation, and nobody on that field had a vote on Monday. Drink some water before Tuscaloosa.

Gus, the mic was live, the hot dog was in your hand, and you were four sentences from a manifesto. Go lie down. Now the receipt: Judge Timothy Kelly ordered those credentials restored immediately on the twenty-fourth of September 2026, and that same day CNN and MS NOW reporters were still kept out of the Xi Jinping arrival while other networks' reporters were let in.

On windmills

BY LOU

DEMOCRAT

1.7 BILLION

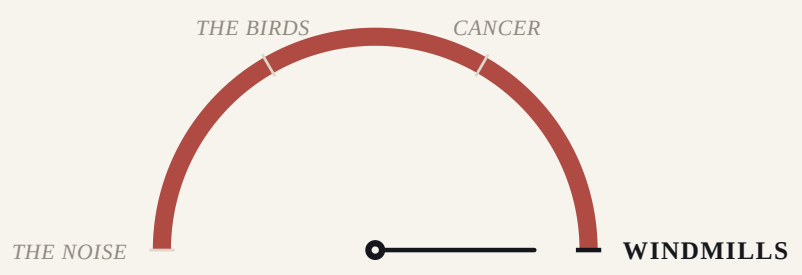

The graveyard, counted. Fish and Wildlife Service estimates put annual U.S. bird deaths from wind turbines at 140,438 to 327,586; from power lines, 8 to 57.3 million; from vehicles, 89 to 340 million; from windows, 365 to 988 million; and from cats, 1.7 to 3.4 billion [1]. Wind generated 464 billion kilowatt-hours in 2025, about 10.5 percent of U.S. utility-scale electricity [2].

And the farm that got stopped. In August 2025 the Interior Department issued a stop-work order to Revolution Wind, a $6.2 billion, 704-megawatt project off New England that was 80 percent complete; in September a federal judge enjoined the order, finding the developer "demonstrated likelihood of success on the merits" [3]. The government now forecasts residential electricity at 18.2 cents a kilowatt-hour this year, up from 17.3 cents in 2025 [4]. The windmill is a graveyard for birds by one ten-thousandth of the cat.

REPUBLICAN

WINDMILLS

The case against, in his own words at a Republican dinner in April 2019: "If you have a windmill anywhere near your house, congratulations, your house just went down 75 percent in value. And they say the noise causes cancer." And on birds: "It's like a graveyard for birds ... the windmills, they wipe them all out" [1]. In September 2025: "Any Country that relies on Windmills is DEAD" [2].

The strongest version of the administration's case is not the birds but the radar. In December the Interior Department paused leases on five offshore projects, citing turbine "clutter" that "obscures legitimate moving targets and generates false targets" on military radar; the secretary said "the prime duty of the United States government is to protect the American people" [3]. A national-security reason is a real reason, and it is stated plainly. The birds and the cancer are on the other side.

“I'm a bird man, a little. I keep a feeder on the porch, and the thing that gets the birds at my house is my neighbor's cat, Duchess. So when he said the windmills "wipe them all out," I looked it up. The wildlife numbers: turbines, a hundred forty thousand to three hundred twenty-seven thousand birds a year. Vehicles, eighty-nine to three hundred forty million. Cats, one point seven to three point four billion. Sorry, I'm going — Duchess is probably on the feeder right now. Of the things on that list, which one got the executive order?” — Lou

“Windmills, he says, are "a graveyard for birds." So somebody counted the graveyards: turbines, a hundred forty thousand to three hundred twenty-seven thousand birds a year. House cats, one point seven to three point four billion. Windows, up to nearly a billion. If he wanted to save the birds, he'd have signed an order against the cat. Instead he stopped a wind farm that was eighty percent built, and a judge restarted it. The birds are still waiting on the cat.”

— Sal

“The president's concern for the birds is sincere and ongoing, and the fact that cats kill ten thousand times more of them only proves the cats have better lobbyists.”
