Trump, DoorDash lunch Darlington by 18 points; Fox News rated the seat a toss-up with a week left.

BY MORT

South Carolina's safe Republican Senate seat died this week, at the hands of the people paid to take its pulse. It was twenty-eight years old.

It was born in 1998, the last year the state elected a Democrat to the Senate, and it had an easy life after that. Donald Trump carried South Carolina by nearly eighteen points in 2024. The seat belonged to Lindsey Graham, and it is held now by his sister, Darline Graham, with the president's endorsement. For years nobody who mattered bothered to ask, because there was nothing to write.

The decline shows up in the paperwork on September 23, when the Cook Political Report shifted South Carolina toward the Democrats — the same notice that moved Kansas from "likely Republican" to "lean Republican." On October 6, Sabato's Crystal Ball shifted South Carolina toward the Democrats too, in the bulletin that moved Alaska from "toss-up" to "leans Democrat." On October 20, Cook moved South Carolina left a second time. That was the same notice in which Cook moved Minnesota toward the Republicans, which disposes of the comfortable idea that the forecasters had simply gotten sweet on

Thirty-seven days after agreeing to pay $115 million for underpaying its drivers, DoorDash finds $17 billion for Instacart

BY RUTH

September 22, New York City. DoorDash agreed to pay the city $131 million to settle a case over underpaying delivery workers, or waiting too long to pay them. Of that, $115 million is to go directly to the workers who were shortchanged. Mayor Zohran Mamdani called it the largest settlement for food delivery workers ever secured in American municipal history. Largest ever is a measurement, not a compliment. It tells you no one has found more money owed to these workers in one place before. That is a fact about the ceiling. It is not a fact about the floor.

Thirty-seven days later, on Thursday, DoorDash announced it will buy Instacart for around $17 billion. The Instacart board approved unanimously. The brand stays. The app stays. Instacart shoppers can keep filling Instacart orders, and grocers can choose which of the two to work with. Nothing is combined. A purchase was announced, and the Federal Trade Commission has it in front of it.

Set the two figures beside each other, since they belong to the same company five weeks apart. One hundred fifteen million dollars for the workers.

America Next paid an adviser's firm $250,000 for canvassing and influencer marketing; his son heckled El Sayed

America Next paid Timmy Teepell's firm $250,000 for canvassing and influencer marketing. On October 20 the Guardian reported that the man who had tried to ambush Abdul El-Sayed with a question about his supposed allegiance to the Muslim Brotherhood — an exchange El-Sayed parlayed into a viral clip for his own campaign — is Teepell's son. I am not going to tell you the contract bought the question; the filings do not say that. I will tell you that the contract has two lines, canvassing and influencer marketing, that America Next has been working, the Guardian reports, to gin up organic opposition to El-Sayed, and that influencer marketing is the industry term for a message built to read as though it arrived by itself.

Run the question itself against the record. On October 15 the President called El-Sayed "100% Muslim Brotherhood." The Guardian reported Thursday that the line goes back eight years, to Laura Loomer, who has said since El-Sayed entered politics in 2018 that his signature on a 2012 open letter supporting democracy in Egypt was a pledge to the Egyptian Islamist group. The Guardian read the letter. It does not mention the Muslim Brotherhood

Data Without Question

Can I come back to something you already straightened out for me? I know you did.

The question was just: who turned it down.

So, the fourteenth. The Guardian, a Wednesday. Common Dreams has the same day under concerns about the department's reliance on one man. And then there's the clip from Thursday the fifteenth. The headline over it reads "Ukraine Blames Elon Musk for Internet Outage Amid Russian Strike." The address of the page itself says Musk suggests Trump is behind the internet outage in Ukraine. Same clip, two names on it. That's the first shape of the answer: you ask who turned it down and you get pointed at the government.

Thursday is also the letter. Four Republican senators signed on — today's Examiner calls the group bipartisan, so take your pick — expressing "grave concern" over Ukraine's sudden loss of access to intelligence-sharing and high-speed Starlink data, which it needs to intercept Russian drones. Here's the part I kept going back over in the shop lot. They asked the inspector general to investigate whether senior Defense officials played a role. Officials.

Since a senator asked Trump to fire Hegseth: top planner fired, fifth of brass to go, Hegseth staying.

Start with the table, because the department does not publish one.

On August 31, The Hill reported the Pentagon was seething over a Washington Post account of a classified assessment: top military leaders had warned Secretary Pete Hegseth against extending large-scale Iran war operations. That is the last on-the-record date on — the one where the warning got out. That was also the day Army Secretary Dan Driscoll announced his resignation, after what The Hill called a months-long turf war with Hegseth. Line one of the ledger, departures column.

Two days later, September 2, Sen. Thom Tillis, Republican of North Carolina and a former member of the Armed Services Committee, asked President Trump to fire Hegseth over what Tillis called "inept management" of the military. Enter that on the other side as a pending item.

On September 10, CBS published an interview Hegseth had given Norah O'Donnell the month before, in which he said "we have all the control in the world" over the outcome of the Iran war and called the devastation to Iran's military capabilities historic. Management, as described by management.

Investigations

I keep a copy of this file on the desk because it is the rare federal document that has survived three administrations and never once had its single charge.

All together now, in order, because the order is the whole story.

2016: the FBI opens an investigation into whether Rep. Ilhan Omar married a man suspected of being her brother. Fox News filed that beat today. The New York Times filed the next clause the same day: several current and former law enforcement officials said the Obama-era investigation found some evidence of a sham marriage. Note the adjective on "Obama-era." It is doing a great deal of work and it is accurate.

2021: a Biden-appointed attorney closes it. Fox reports the opening and the closing in the same breath, which is a courtesy to anyone keeping a ledger.

12 October 2026: federal immigration agents search Omar's home in Washington. CBS News reported the probe centers on her childhood immigration paperwork — the forms completed by her late father, when she was a child. France 24 filed the raid the same week; Omar called it political intimi-

Three instruments in seven days, and every one of them points the same way. On 23 October the Department of Justice went into federal court to stop Alaska certifying its Senate result — if the Republican incumbent does not win. Only then. A condition precedent, you see, and the condition is a Republican defeat. Senator Tillis said on Sunday that the outcome was "appropriate to take a look at." On Wednesday Senator Scott asked that same Department to investigate Mary Peltola's campaign. On Thursday Governor Dunleavy directed the Department of Public Safety to determine "whether this scheme violated Alaska's laws and whether criminal charges or civil action are warranted." Two men named Dan Sullivan sit on that ballot, one of them the sitting senator, and the count every one of these documents concerns has not happened … nor has a single page of it been turned the other way. Peltola denied the allegations. The Washington Examiner had the whole affair on 31 August, before anything was filed anywhere. Alaska votes Tuesday. Six days.

Sanctions waiver meant to cut diesel prices leaves automakers paying more for diesel.

BY RUTH
The Money Desk

The filing starts in September, before even Russia has left Kherson. On September seventeenth the Transportation Department gave diesel truckers a ninety-day waiver to drive up to sixteen hours a day, because, the department said, fuel costs were already running high on account of the war in Iran. That is one war, already blamed, three weeks before the war we are discussing today gets its turn.

On October sixth the White House tried the supply side again, this time from the other end: the president announced steps to widen access to reduced, tax-exempt diesel, aimed at bringing the retail number down. Two days later the number had not moved. The Washington Examiner reported on October eighth that the diesel average kept climbing despite the administration's own order suspending diesel fuel tax payments. The fix shipped. The price did not follow it out the door.

Two days after that, on October tenth, the administration reached for Russian diesel directly and lifted the sanctions on it, the fuel this desk has been pricing since the war in Ukraine began. President Zelensky objected,

AS IT HAS ON THE FRONT

September 22, New York City. DoorDash agreed to pay the city $131 million to settle a case over underpaying delivery workers, or waiting too long to pay them. Of that, $115 million is to go directly to the workers who were short-changed. Mayor Zoltan Marmdani called it the largest settlement for gig-driver wages ever secured in American municipal history. Largest ever is a measurement, not a compliment. It is not a case that has ever found more money owed to more drivers in one place before. That is a fact about the ceiling. It is not a fact about the floor.

Thirty-seven days later, on Thursday, DoorDash announced it will buy Instacart for around $17 billion. The Instacart board unanimously endorsed the terms. Instacart shoppers will be able to order from 150,000 stores where they could order from 100,000. DoorDash's chief executive said the delivery business is "one of the hardest things to get right outside."

The $115 million is not charged to itemise, because nobody has published that schedule. The $17 billion is not itemised either, but it is being spent on the acquisition of a company that, the FTC ordered DoorDash, Instacart and other companies to turn over detailed information about their "use of personal data in prices and compensation." The agency asked the two companies on Wednesday how they set pay. On Thursday the two companies proposed to become one company. That is a one-day gap, and one day is the count that matters here.

The Federal Trade Commission at the American Economic Liberties Project, called the merger brazen and pointed to the investigations both companies face at the state and federal levels. Opponents asked the FTC to block it. Their phrase was "food-delivery monopoly".

A settlement is paid once and closes. A network of 150,000 stores is paid for, and it does not close. The business carving the bags up the stairs appears in both descriptions, on the same line, which is the expensive line.

America Next paid an adviser's firm $250,000 for canvassing and influencer marketing; his son heckled El-Sayed

"Could Abdul El-Sayed's plan for AI companies stave off catastrophe?", 29 October 2026 (PHOTO VIA THE GUARDIAN — THE ORIGINAL REPORT)

AS IT RAN ON THE FRONT

America Next paid Timmy Teepell's firm $250,000 for canvassing and influencer marketing. On October 20 the Guardian reported that the man who had tried to ambush Abdul El-Sayed with a question about his supposed allegiance to the Muslim Brotherhood — an exchange El-Sayed parlayed into a viral clip for his own campaign — is Teepell's son. I am not going to tell you the contract bought the question; the filings do not say that. I will tell you that the contract has two lines, canvassing and influencer marketing, that America Next has been working, the Guardian reports, to gin up organic opposition to El-Sayed, and that influencer marketing is the industry term for a message built to read as though it arrived by itself.

Run the question itself against the record. On October 15 the President called El-Sayed "100% Muslim Brotherhood." The Guardian reported Thursday that the line goes back eight years, to Laura Loomer, who has said since El-Sayed entered politics in 2018 that his signature on a 2012 open letter supporting democracy in Egypt was a pledge to the Egyptian Islamist group. The Guardian read the letter. It does not mention the Muslim Brotherhood once. Mike Rogers has carried the claim through the fall, and on October 26 said he had not called El-Sayed a terrorist, which answers one word and leaves the sentence around it standing....

...(cont) Thursday the New York Post advanced the file to the candidate's father, who sits on the board of an Islamic charity the FBI once raided over cash sent to Saddam Hussein. Reconciled: a board seat, held by a man who is not on the ballot, at an organization whose troubles predate the campaign by decades.

Wednesday, Representative Haley Stevens said her fiancé would be voting for Rogers; Fox reported he used the word antisemite about El-Sayed and said he endangers Jews. Stevens is still supporting El-Sayed. She called it a household divided, which is a generous reading of a Democratic household supplying the closing argument for the Republican.

Thursday also brought Truthout's accounting of who is paying for the season: billionaires, corporations and AIPAC spending millions against progressive candidates in these midterms. Mehdi Hasan laid out AIPAC's part in this particular race on October 22. The attack lines and the money sit on the same tables.

El-Sayed, meantime, published a plan to put artificial intelligence companies under public ownership — the Guardian's Thursday read calls it an antidote to ideological gridlock. It has gone largely undiscussed, hon. There are five days left, and the only line item anybody has itemized in public is the $250,000.

"They spent a quarter million on canvassing and influencer marketing to make the opposition look like it grew in somebody's backyard, and the actual question came from the operator's kid. Then the same donor rolls that fund that outfit turn up funding the whole campaign against every progressive on the ballot this year. Five days out, a guy who wants to put the AI companies under public ownership is answering for a letter from 2012 that doesn't say what they say it says."

— Sal

"Look, nobody paid anybody to ask a question, and I never said the contract was for questions — did I say that? That doesn't sound like me. The man signed a letter, people have concerns about the letter, and if the Guardian wants to read the letter out loud, well, fine, that's their business; the concerns are still out there, which is the point, and I'd say the same thing about anybody."

Here's the part I kept going back over in the shop lot. They asked the inspector general to investigate whether senior Defense officials played a role. Officials. Their word. Not mine, I wouldn't know one from the other.

Ten days on, Saturday the twenty-fourth, Ukraine's military says the connection is stable again. Guardian carries it. And then hours after that announcement — hours — the man who owns the company accuses the Ukrainian military of violating the company's terms. And that same Saturday he says he gave the order. Morning Star has it in Sunday's paper, and I'm reading off the page here: he "admitted on Saturday that he gave the order for his company SpaceX to restrict the speed" on the service in Ukraine. President Zelensky had already said the Starlink and Starshield links were back to the speeds they ran before restrictions that disrupted front-line operations for more than a week. So there's the second shape: the owner says he did it.

Now today. Thursday the twenty-ninth. Five days after that. The inspector general writes back to the lawmakers and declines to open the investigation, and the phrase ABC reports is that it was a contractual matter.

And here's where I'm slow, so bear with me. Last winter the car wouldn't turn over in the cold, so I brought it in. Kid takes it around back, I sit in the lot with the dog and a coffee, and the next morning the thing won't go over twenty-five. First day I call: nobody touched it. Second day: probably your gas. Third day the kid tells me he set it down himself, because I'd been running it wrong, which is in the ticket I signed, apparently. So I ask for the service manager, because what I want is a name — which one of them turned my car down, and whether anybody in that building told him to. And the manager hears me out, very patient, nice man, and tells me it's a contractual matter between me and the shop. He works for the shop.

So I'd like to ask it the third time and then I'll go. The letter asked which Defense officials played a role. Does the sentence that came back name an official? And if the restriction was a contract question, who are the two parties to it — the page says the company owns the service, so who is the other one?

Hold the elevator a second, would you. One thing. The senators asked which officials. The owner says he gave the order himself. Both of those are on paper, in front of me, right here. Which of them is the contractual matter?

"A guy says out loud that he throttled the internet soldiers were using to shoot down drones, four senators ask the department's own watchdog which officials knew, and the watchdog writes back that it's a contract question. That's the con: call it a contract and nobody has to be named, nobody testifies, and the only person who can turn the service back on is the same one who turned it down. Ukrainian crews spent more than a week on degraded links while that sentence was being drafted."

— Sal

"It's a contract. Contracts have terms, the terms were violated, and an inspector general is not a referee for — did I say violated? That's not my characterization, that's the company's. Look, the service is restored, speeds are back where they were, and I genuinely don't understand why we're relitigating a week that already ended."

WHAT HAPPENED. Defense Secretary Pete Hegseth fired the Pentagon's top military planner over alleged leaks about the Iran and Ukraine wars.

WHO GETS PAID. Hegseth keeps his job and picks who plans the wars.

WHAT SLIPS. The leak that reached the public was the generals' warning against extending the Iran war; the next warning is less likely to get out.

WHAT'S NEXT. If Congress holds no vote on the Iran war, the war outlasts the complaint: after the House rejected both a Libya authorization and a limit on its money on June 24, 2011, that operation ran four more months.

AS IT RAN ON THE FRONT

Start with the table, because the department does not publish one.

On August 31, The Hill reported the Pentagon was seething over a Washington Post account of a classified assessment: top military leaders had warned Secretary Pete Hegseth against extending large-scale Iran war operations. That is the leak this file has a date on — the one where the warning got out. That was also the day Army Secretary Dan Driscoll announced his resignation, after what The Hill called a months-long turf war with Hegseth. Line one of the ledger, departures column....

...(cont) Two days later, September 2, Sen. Thom Tillis, Republican of North Carolina and a former member of the Armed Services Committee, asked President Trump to fire Hegseth over what Tillis called "inept management" of the military. Enter that on the other side as a pending item.

On September 10, CBS published an interview Hegseth had given Norah O'Donnell the month before, in which he said "we have all the control in the world" over the outcome of the Iran war and called the devastation to Iran's military capabilities historic. Management, as described by management.

On September 29, The Hill reported the department's plan to cut 20 percent of its admirals and generals. One in five. No list of names has been published.

Which brings us to October 29. Hegseth fired Army Lt. Gen. Brett Sylvia, the Pentagon's top military planner, head of strategy, plans and policy on the Joint Chiefs of Staff, over what a Pentagon official described to CBS as apparent misconduct with classified information on the Iran and Russia-Ukraine wars. Fox News reports Sylvia allegedly failed three polygraph exams tied to classified leaks about the Iran war and Ukraine before the firing.

Three exams. Run them against the calendar, since three is a number and numbers go in a column. The receipts date one leak: the August 31 report that the generals had told the secretary not to extend the operation. Fifty-nine days from that report to this firing, three exams somewhere inside them. The receipts draw no line between the two, and neither do I. I am noting what the file contains, hon, which is one dated leak and one officer out.

Now total the columns. Departures since August 31: one Army secretary, one top military planner, one-fifth of the admirals and generals on the department's own plan. Requests to remove the secretary: one, from a senator of his own party, outstanding fifty-seven days.

The department calls this accountability. It is running in the direction that costs the secretary nothing.

"A senator from his own party went on the record saying the man can't run the building, and two months later the building is emptier and he's still in it — the Army secretary's gone, the top war planner's gone, one in five generals and admirals is on the chopping list. Notice which leak nobody's hunting: the one where the brass told him not to extend the Iran war. We've got an active war with the planning desk being cleared, and the only guy nobody's investigating is the one holding the job a senator asked the President to take away."

— Sal

"Look, leaks are leaks, and three failed polygraphs is three failed polygraphs — I'm not saying polygraphs are science, did I say that? That doesn't sound like me. And cutting twenty percent of the admirals and generals, that's a taxpayer savings, that's the flatter chain of command everybody's been asking for, so if you're counting departures you should really be counting it as efficiency, which is what I've been saying the whole time, basically."

Probe Obama opened in 2016, Biden's appointee closed in 2021, Trump reopened six days before the vote

By MITCH
INVESTIGATIONS

"Nearly 40 House Dems skip effort to end Ilhan Omar immigration probe", 29 October 2026 (PHOTO VIA FOX NEWS – THE ORIGINAL REPORT)

■ THE SHORT VERSION
typed by bot

WHAT HAPPENED. The Trump administration reopened a closed FBI investigation into Rep. Ilhan Omar's childhood immigration paperwork.

WHO GETS PAID. The president's party, which gains a sitting critic under federal investigation days before the midterms.

WHAT SLIPS. The choice of who gets investigated moves from career prosecutors to the officials she criticizes.

WHAT'S NEXT. If no charge comes, taxpayers pay later: Castle Hills, Texas arrested a councilwoman in 2019, the charge was dropped, and the city paid $500,000 in 2025.

AS IT RAN ON THE FRONT

I keep a copy of this file on the desk because it is the rare federal document that has survived three administrations without producing a single charge.

All together now, in order, because the order is the whole story....

...(cont) 2016: the FBI opens an investigation into whether Rep. Ilhan Omar married a man suspected of being her brother. Fox News filed that beat today. The New York Times filed the next clause the same day: several current and former law enforcement officials said the Obama-era investigation found some evidence of a sham marriage. Note the adjective on "Obama-era." It is doing a great deal of work and it is accurate.

2021: a Biden-appointed attorney closes it. Fox reports the opening and the closing in the same breath, which is a courtesy to anyone keeping a ledger.

12 October 2026: federal immigration agents search Omar's home in Washington. CBS News reported the probe centers on her childhood immigration paperwork — the forms completed by her late father, when she was a child. France 24 filed the raid the same week; Omar called it political intimidation by the government's own institutions.

23 October: a Justice Department court filing refers to the congresswoman as "Ilhan Nur Said Elmi," without explanation. The president posted that her name is not her name. Her answer, on the record: "My name has always been Ilhan Omar." By last week the live legal question was not a charge at all but whether the public may read the warrant that authorized the search — a fight now in front of the same judge the president once called a radical left lunatic and wanted impeached.

Back up five days to 18 October, line by line. Obama writes that the effort to strip her citizenship and remove her from the country is "so appalling," and that the government "can't selectively target individuals simply because of their political beliefs or what they say." The file he is describing is the file his FBI opened in 2016. Both sentences are true at the same time. That is the document's entire trick: it has outlasted the administration that started it, the administration that stopped it, and the explanation each one gave.

Today's last clause is the quietest. Rep. Pramila Jayapal circulated a letter asking that the probe be ended. Nearly 40 House Democrats did not sign it. Fox News lists Nancy Pelosi and Steny Hoyer among the non-signers.

So: ten years, three administrations, one search, no one charged, and a letter nearly forty members found easier not to put a pen to. The paper underneath all of it was filled out by a father for a daughter who was a child. Six days from now, it remains the most durable object in Washington.

♥ FROM THE CORNER ♥
DUTCH

THE FILE OPENED IN 2016, CLOSED IN 2021, AND CAME BACK SIX DAYS BEFORE THE midterms. That is not an investigation, it is a filing cabinet wired to the election calendar. And because the paper they pulled was a form a parent filled out for a child, the standard set this month reaches the folder in your own hall closet — the immigration paperwork in your mother's handwriting with your name misspelled on the first line, a document that closes when they close it and opens in whatever October they need it.

"For ten years they told us there was nothing in this file; this month they told us there was, and the only thing that changed in between was the calendar. They searched her house over a form her father filled out when she was a kid, filed no charge, and nearly forty members of her own party couldn't locate a pen. Six days before you vote, the lesson on the table is that paperwork your parents signed for you is a case the government can reopen the minute you become inconvenient."
— Sal

"Look, this investigation started under Obama — Obama, their guy — so if it's political, it's their politics, not ours. Did I say that? That doesn't sound like me. Nobody is targeting anybody; the file was simply reactivated, by career professionals, in October, and I'd point out that nearly forty House Democrats declined to sign a letter defending her, which tells you something, though I'm not going to say what it tells you."

Governor opens criminal probe into the one Alaska candidate whose win a federal suit seeks to void

By STERLING

WHAT HAPPENED. Alaska's governor ordered state investigators to open a criminal case into Democrat Mary Peltola's Senate campaign.

WHO GETS PAID. Republican Senator Dan Sullivan, the incumbent whose seat the Justice Department suit would shield from a certified loss.

WHAT SLIPS. Whether Alaska's votes get certified moves out of the state's hands and into a federal judge's and the governor's investigators'.

WHAT'S NEXT. If the suit holds, the result waits on a court rather than a canvass. That is what the president's election order got after 25 March 2025: a judge blocked part of it within 30 days and its mail-voting provisions for good fifteen months later, long after people had voted.

Three instruments in seven days, and every one of them points the same way. On 23 October the Department of Justice went into federal court to stop Alaska certifying its Senate result — if the Republican incumbent does not win. Only then. A condition precedent, you see, and the condition is a Republican defeat. Senator Tillis said on Sunday that the outcome was "appropriate to take a look at." On Wednesday Senator Scott asked that same Department to investigate Mary Peltola's campaign. On Thursday Governor Dunleavy directed the Department of Public Safety to determine "whether this scheme violated Alaska's laws and whether criminal charges or civil action are warranted." Two men named Dan Sullivan sit on that ballot, one of them the sitting senator, and the count every one of these documents concerns has not happened ... nor has a single page of it been turned the other way. Peltola denied the allegations. The Washington Examiner had the whole affair on 31 August, before anything was filed anywhere. Alaska votes Tuesday. Six days.

❦ FROM THE CORNER ❦

DUTCH

THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT ASKED A FEDERAL COURT ON 23 OCTOBER TO BLOCK CERTIFICATION of Alaska's Senate result if the Republican incumbent loses, the governor ordered state investigators this week to open a criminal file on his opponent's campaign, and a senator asked Washington to open one as well. That is not an inquiry into a ballot, that is a result written down in advance with three offices hired to stamp it. The suit bites only if one side loses, so the side that loses decides whether the counting stood for anything, and that puts the last hands on the envelope you signed at your kitchen table in a federal courtroom instead of a count.

Two foxes at the fence now. The farmer latches the shed at dusk.

Three offices aimed at the Democrat who might win, and not one of them aimed at the Republican who might lose. Six days from now Alaskans vote, and a federal judge is sitting on a motion that says the result only counts if it comes out one way."

"Nobody is investigating a candidate, they are investigating a scheme — there is a difference, and I am not being defensive, you are being defensive. Did I say the lawsuit only takes effect if our guy loses? That does not sound like me. Look, if Democrats had not gone and found a second Dan Sullivan there would be nothing to look at, which is exactly why the Department filed before anyone looked."

Sanctions waiver meant to cut diesel prices leaves automakers paying more for diesel.

By Walter Sullivan

Filed under: Economy

● THE SHORT VERSION

Signed by: Me

WHAT HAPPENED: The White House lifted sanctions on Russian diesel, reminding us lowered fuel prices.

WHY IT MATTERS: Cheaper diesel makes gas-a-tempered U.S. market smoother for consumers, but hurts automakers.

WHAT'S NEXT: The administration has made Senator Marshall explain why the decision to lift the sanctions is in the best interest of the United States.

WHAT'S NOT: If the patient bleeds, the price keeps moving, so its more likely outcome of the fix is more Russian diesel and less U.S. diesel. Hoping that the building Congress never passed, they'll be right.

SECTION ONE: THE CRISIS

The filing clerk in September, when the sanctions were first enacted, the Department screenshotted the Transportation Department guidance that Russian diesel was eligible for up to sixteen hours a day because, the department said, fuel was "critical to the national interest." Sixteen hours a day. That is one way. Monday, Wednesday, Friday. That is the way we are discussing today to get here.

The clerk, who has been with the agency since the supply side again, this time from the other end. the president announced a plan to lift sanctions on Russian diesel, the diesel, aimed at bringing the retail number down. Two days after the announcement, the U.S. Energy Information Administration reported that gasoline prices had fallen for the fourth straight day. Diesel prices fell for the first time in five weeks, some of the gains attributed to the sanctions. SECTION TWO: THE DELAY

"They told us the fix was pulling Russian diesel sanctions on the price at the pump would immediately drop for weeks and two other fixes later the number went up anyway. The price at the end of the fix for diesel number 2 — the automaker does, and it takes home in the sticker price of new Ford, Volkswagen has yet to show him one receipt proving any of this worked."

"The waiver secures energy stability for the whole hemisphere, that's the end with basic diesel which from two higher without it — we just can't show you the receipts," Marshall said in a statement. "The U.S. Energy Information Agency, the timing on our own lines is, uh, a separate issue. Don't blame us. That's not part of the fix."

SECTION THREE: THE STORY

On roaring back

DEMOCRAT

MINUS 35,000

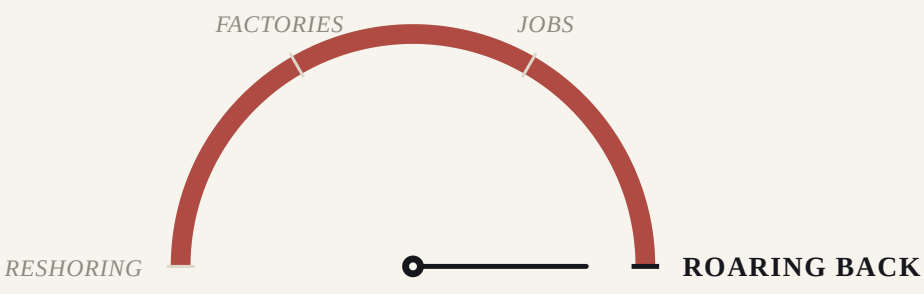

How far back. Manufacturing employment was 12,673,000 in January 2025 and 12,638,000 in August 2026 — 35,000 fewer than at the inauguration, after the recovery from December [1]. The pipeline for future factory jobs is thinner: spending on manufacturing construction ran at an annual rate of $237.5 billion in January 2025 and $169.8 billion in July 2026, down 28.5 percent [2].

And the trillions. Economists at the Peterson Institute found the investment pledges "clouded with uncertainty," with the Gulf states' "nearly $4 trillion" in commitments ones that "strain credibility" [3]. Roaring back was the promise on the day of the tariffs. Seventeen months later the count is still 35,000 short of the day he took office, and the cranes are building less.

ROARING BACK

The line, from the Rose Garden on April 2, 2025, the day of the tariff announcement: "Jobs and factories will come roaring back into our country and you see it happening already" [1].

There is a recent upswing, and it belongs here in full. The Bureau of Labor Statistics reported in September that manufacturing employment "continued its upward trend (+16,000)," and is "up by 58,000 since a recent low in December 2025" [2]. The Institute for Supply Management's factory index stood at 54.6 in August, its eighth straight month of expansion [3]. The White House keeps a running list of announced investments that it says runs to trillions of dollars [4]. Eight months of growth is a trend, and a trend is what a roar would look like from the inside. How far it has come back is on the other side.

“My nephew does his homework on these charts, so I borrowed two. Manufacturing jobs: twelve million six hundred seventy-three thousand in January of last year. Twelve million six hundred thirty-eight thousand this August. And the other chart, the one that shows what's being built, factories under construction: two hundred thirty-seven and a half billion a year, then a hundred sixty-nine point eight. He drew a little arrow on the first chart where it turns up in December, and it does turn up. Sorry, I'm going. If it's roaring back, when does it get back to January?” — Lou

“"Jobs and factories will come roaring back." Rose Garden, April of last year. Since the inauguration, factory jobs are down thirty-five thousand, and spending on building new factories is down twenty-eight and a half percent. To be fair, they've been climbing since December — fifty-eight thousand off the bottom, and the purchasing managers say eight straight months of growth. So the roar is real. It's the sound of climbing back toward where they started.”

“The jobs are roaring back from the low they reached while they were getting ready to roar, which is how a roar works: first the inhale, then the part everyone hears.”
