Trump told the Justice Department to sue to block Alaska's certification; the Republican narrowly loses; the complaint named zero ballots, and the vote is two days off.

BY MORT
The Recordo Bureau

The concession died this week in Anchorage, of causes its attending physicians declined to name.

It was born of the certified count, and that was the whole of its anatomy: somebody counts, somebody comes up short, and the one who comes up short says so out loud and goes home. It was never set down in a statute. That is the shit of it. The concession was a habit, and habits keep no lawyers.

The first symptom was reported on 31 August, when the Washington Examiner wrote that Alaska Democrats had found a man willing to run for the Senate seat under a name all but identical to the incumbent's — Dan J. Sullivan, where the Republican holding the seat is Dan S. Sullivan. One letter apart. On 9 October the president posted that Alaska's voting system was stupid: "How stupid are we to do this?" On 14 October he urged Alaskans to vote for the "real" Dan Sullivan and said his administration was looking into the other one.

On 23 October the Justice Department went to federal court and asked it to withhold certification of the Senate result if the Republican incumbent loses.

Justice Department charges James Comey a third time Monday, over a leak two earlier FBI investigations closed without charges.

BY THE WRECKING CREW
The Recordo Desk

I'm not defending the Department. The Department doesn't need defending. I'm putting the week in order, which nobody else has bothered to do.

Monday. Justice filed a third case against James Comey, two counts of leaking information related to national defense, in federal court in Washington. The Guardian notes the filing gives few details, and that the government alleges the leak in 2016, with an unnamed person. Few details is what a charging document is for. Two earlier FBI investigations into that same leak closed without charges, which the other side reads as an answer and I read as two looks that missed something. By Friday a judge had called the third prosecution a possible exercise in futility, and prosecutors had suggested a fourth charge anyway. That is the process continuing.

Also Monday, a judge ruled the administration unlawfully fired Comey's prosecutor daughter, who had worked on the Epstein sex-crimes case. Different matter. The receipt says the administration, which is a wide word, and I would rather it stayed wide.

Also Monday, on Truth Social, the president asked him that same day to explain it

Musk capped Ukraine's air defense terminals at 100 mph, blamed the U.S. government for ten days, then admitted the order and lifted it the same day.

Start with the part of the record that is on our side, because that part is real.

On Wednesday the fourteenth, Ukraine said its terminals had been limited. Serhii Beskrestnov, an adviser to President Zelensky, wrote on Telegram that the limits arrived without warning and applied to Starshield terminals moving faster than 100 mph, the Washington Examiner reported. A speed threshold is an engineering parameter. It gets set in a room with whiteboards, not in a room with — all right. A cap at 100 mph is a cap on things that move. Trucks. Aircraft. Air defense. I would like that back. It is a cap on terminals.

The company's position that day was public and specific. "Starshield systems are owned and controlled by the US government," Musk wrote, and limits on speed or usage are decided by the US military and, ultimately, the president. France 24 carried the same posture: any restrictions "would be due to decisions made by the US government." You can call that deflection. I call it an org chart.

Senator Thom Tillis, a Republican, asked him that same day to explain it

The Supreme Court let Homeland Security screen state voter rolls weeks before the midterms, then let New Hampshire reject student IDs as too close to an election.

BY MITCH
Investigations

Nothing in this week's stack is hidden. It is orders, an application, and disclosure forms, every page of it public, and that is the first thing to say.

On Friday, September 25th, the Supreme Court, six to three, lifted a lower court's order that had kept the Department of Homeland Security from using and expanding a database called SAVE — the Systematic Alien Verification for Entitlements — to screen state voter rolls while the case is on appeal. The database was built to check whether noncitizens qualified for government benefits. Common Dreams reports it is known for flagging naturalized citizens, and that eligible voters may have their registrations wrongly canceled weeks before the midterms. Fox News relayed the Associated Press's reading: the immediate impact is likely limited, because existing law blocks most states from systematically purging voters within ninety days of an election.

Hold on to that number.

Then October. All together now — the application on the Tuesday, the order on the Thursday. On Tuesday the 20th, New Hampshire officials filed an emergency petition asking the Court to lift what they called a last-minute

Two months after a senator asked Trump to fire Hegseth over 'inept management' of the military, Hegseth fired the Pentagon's top military planner.

BY STERLING

You will want to know who may remove whom, and the answer was written down long before September, and it has not shifted an inch since. A general sits at the Secretary's pleasure. The Secretary sits at the President's. A senator sits at nobody's pleasure and may remove no one at all, which is the thing to keep in your hand while you consider what Thom Tillis did on September 2.

He went to the cameras. Republican of North Carolina, a former member of the Senate Armed Services Committee — a man thoroughly acquainted with the instrument he does not hold — and he called on President Trump to fire Secretary of Defense Pete Hegseth over what he called Hegseth's "inept management" of the military. Army Secretary Dan Driscoll had announced his resignation after repeatedly clashing with Hegseth. Tillis made a request. Not a motion, not a vote, not a referral. A request, mind you.

October supplied the demonstration. On October 13 Speaker Mike Johnson nudged the President in public: "I wouldn't be watching." The daughter of a Fort Hood victim said livestreaming "isn't closure for any of us." On October 15 seventy-two former officers wrote that the broadcast "will taint

Asked to itemize the Iran war, the Pentagon returned a bill five billion dollars larger; the president says the war ends after the vote, two days out.

BY RUTH
The Money Desk

The promise that the Iran war ends soon turned thirty-nine days old on Friday. No details have been added to it in that time. That is not a scandal, exactly. It is a reconciliation problem: the promise carries no figures, and the war carries nothing but.

Start with the war's. In July the Congressional Budget Office put the cost at nearly forty billion dollars and called its own number conservative. On August 13 the Pentagon gave Congress a separate figure, just over forty-two billion. This week the Pentagon's figure is forty-seven point one billion. That is a rise of more than five billion dollars in two and a half months, and the department has not said which lines moved.

Senators asked which lines moved. On September 17 every Democrat in the Senate except Senator John Fetterman signed an open letter to Secretary of Defense Pete Hegseth pressing for a cost breakdown of the war; The Hill described the letter as largely symbolic. That same Thursday, Democratic and Republican senators came out of a closed-door briefing with Pentagon policy chief Elbridge Colby saying they had not gotten clear answers on the > Deal with the part of the record that is on our side, because that part is true.

On Wednesday the fourteenth, Ukraine said its terminals had been limited. Kateryna Bondarenko, a defense researcher in Zelenskiy, wrote on Telegram that the limits arrived without warning and applied to Ukrainian-made terminals starting faster than 100 mph, the Washington Examiner reported. A speed threshold is an engineering statement. It gets set in a room with whiteboards, or in a room with — all right, a cap at 100 mph is a cap on things that are not, in fact, missiles. And so: I know. I would like that back. It is a cap on terminals.

The cap's supposed purpose was to keep civilian and spy craft safe. "Starshield systems are owned and controlled by the US government," Musk wrote, in a post that was viewed 2.3 million times and liked by the US military and, ultimately, the president. France 24 reported that Ukrainian officials had asked for the limits to be lifted on the fourteenth and the fifteenth. "It's not a matter of what I call it or say it that.

Reuters: The Trump–Musk feud, explained. Musk added him that some day to explain it and said he hoped the overnight disruptions were over. Ukrainian officials said the limits were lifted before the 48 hours, four Bangladesh senators signed a letter. On the eighteenth, Bondarenko wrote that the limits were lifted before that the slowdown was worth "a congressional investigation." Three days. Ukrainian officials said the limits were lifted before that the slowdown was worth "a congressional investigation." Three days.

The Trump administration approved a possible sale of 500 Patriot interceptors to Ukraine, $1.1 billion, funded entirely by U.S. taxpayers, Reuters reported. The Pentagon said the package included 500 PAC-3 MSE missiles and 10 launchers. The Post had reported on October 15 that Ukraine's interceptor stocks were "dangerously low" and that Trump expected that Musk is the longest modern minister donor in American history — $44 million, and the party he built the administration with — a $400 million edge.

The relationship is contractual. That is the finding, and it would ask you to notice whom it covers.

Can I ask you something before you go? When somebody hands you a present, who picks it out?

Take your time. I'm not being cute — I know the answer, the receiver, the hands, and the notebook's in the raincoat, and the raincoat's in the car, which has needed a fan belt since November 2024 and which you've been there. Here it is.

[...count] August 30. The president posts that he intends to "fill the Strategic Petroleum Reserve." He calls the process "topping out." And the arrangement itself, printed with the capital letter, calls the "a Gift from Venezuela to the People of the United States."

So the price is warned on the pump, a week later, September 6, the Energy Secretary is on television saying the administration reached a deal granting control of more than 45 billion barrels of oil, and he says — I'm getting — "We have a lot of leverage over Venezuela." Then he says we control the sale of the oil, and the money, and where it can't get right there on my page, so I'll leave it where it stops. The same Sunday, another outlet writes that the Secretary denied stealing Venezuela's oil one hour after saying the country is "forced to work" with the United States. One hour. Forced to work, and one minute.

What does a thirty-minute military operation open? Fox News printed it September 11: an estimated 100 would-be U.S. buyers, 300 billion barrels of reserves being tapped, a low price tag and cut prices. And of the 65 billion barrels in the deal, how much is assigned to the Pentagon's own column? Thirty-five percent.

My brother-in-law Ray borrowed my extension ladder in April. George, left-side, under the mower. In August he brings back the bottom section and keeps the fly section for his gutters, and he tells me he'll handle what the ladder's been handling for now on, and there's a card taped to it. A card. I'm not telling you Ray is a generous man. I'm telling you a smaller gesture on the page in front of me, which side of this picked out the present?

If the supply was opened on the 6th, and the price is the? I copied the holiday number twice because I thought I had it wrong. Labor Day, national average, regular: $4.15 a gallon, the highest AAA has it for that weekend, ever. Another wire has it. Diesel hit $5.45 on September 8, an all-time record. The Associated Press noted diesel moves freight, so the groceries ride with it, The Times ran a piece last almost three months. Same called typewriters. What are they doing, per the Times? Trying to heat high-price prices.

And how does the present get into the reserve? September 4, at flight out of Caracas, the Secretary explained the U.S. companies swap heavy Venezuelan crude for U.S.-produced light or medium crude that suits the reserve better so it can be sold into the tank we're told we're filling?

The give, meanwhile, is in Brooklyn. On September 5, for the highest AAA has it for that weekend, ever. Another wire has it. Diesel hit $5.45 on September 8, an all-time record. The Associated Press noted diesel moves freight, so the groceries ride with it, The Times ran a piece last almost three months. Same called typewriters. What are they doing, per the Times? The Supreme Court let Homeland Security screen state voter rolls weeks before the midterms, then let New Hampshire reject student IDs as too close to an election.

Nothing in this week's stack is hidden. It is orders, an application, and disclosure forms, every page of it public, and that is the first thing to note.

On Friday, September 25th, the Supreme Court, six to three, lifted a lower court's injunction and let the Department of Homeland Security screen 47 million voter records against federal databases for ineligibility. The dissent's motion for Entitlements — to screen state voter rolls while the case is still being heard — was denied. The majority's reasoning, in its short unsigned order, was that the Government Decrees reports it is known for flagging naturalised citizens, and that the Secretary's Order of the 23rd for that purpose expires with the midterms before its 2027-04-04. Each on September 22nd, when the court's own docket showed the case was still live and the record still lists, the argument among Democrats was whether to say it out loud.

Eight hours later, the same docket here hundred seventy-six miles away, the New Hampshire Ballot Law Commission, by a vote of three to two, rejected the student ID cards issued by the Granite Mountain Community College, which is the only college in the state that issues them. The commission's motion is to say it in paperwork too, paperwork that is decisive.

On Saturday the 24th, The Lever traced the local lobby routing millions through groups governing incumbents, reproductive rights, and Latino candidates, and reported that 42 lawmakers and their campaigns received the money. On the same day, Public Politics reported that 42 lobby groups funnelled the money. Both stories ran on the 24th. Both were true. The difference is the number of groups the reporter chose to count. Nine, with a different name on the envelope is a filing question, and 42 is a question about who signs.

All eight were shown to be directed private, on a form, and not to the public. The Commission's vote was 3–2 by a volunteer with a line waiting behind them. The student will be asked for the same thing.

Two months after a senator asked Trump to fire Hegseth over 'inept management' of the military, Hegseth fired the Pentagon's top military planner.

By STEVE ETO
Staff Writer, The Evening Button

"Hegseth has run Pentagon over planner Scott Sylva in latest military shake-up" (8 words) — The Evening Button

"Trump said it was time to make way remove whom, and the move was welcomed by many long-lobbied lawmakers, and it has not shifted an inch since. A general sits at the Secretary's scheme. The Secretary is the Secretary's, and the Secretary sits at nobody's pleasure and may remove no one at all, which is the thing to keep in mind." — Ian Frazier, writing about Thom Tillis on the segment 2.

He went to the cameras. Republican of North Carolina, a former member of the Senate Armed Services Committee — the committee that oversees the Pentagon's budget and policy — and a man who had called Hegseth his friend. Trump in the Secretary of Defense Pete Hegseth over what he called Hegseth's "inept management" of the military. Three days later Secretary Dan Driscoll had announced his resignation after repeatedly clashing with Hegseth's team. Trump called it a mutiny, not a vote, not a referral. A request, mind you...

Then — October supplied the documentation. On October 13 Speaker Mike Johnson nudged the President in public: "I would welcome your resignation." On October 14 Trump told livestreaming "isn't closure for any of us." On October 15 severely Hegseth. Who was "the person" who "left" that "after the honor of the military that empires it, and a nation that allows it." Hegseth's response, on October 16, was to announce that Pentagon executives broadcast fee to the public." He'd moved it. The same day, Trump told the Oval Office that he'd "made a decision" on this event of the Secretary. The same week, Trump, severely one person. You will not have noticed what moved, and it was the cameras.

On October 22 the Washington Post reported that Hegseth had wanted Sylva removed after a series of briefings delivered in his office because he found its historical significance "attractive." Sylva was a career officer who "knew the military's operations and trained curtains," and that his staff attempted it themselves. The Post cited [1].

On October 24 Hegseth began removing Sylva from his, the Pentagon's top military planner, director for strategy, plans and policy, since 2021. Sylva was a career officer who previously ran child CBS News, for apparent misconduct with classified information on the line and Hegseth's team. Then CBS News Fort Hood notes Sylva is the second general ousted from that same chief room. The Secretary, the Secretary, the Secretary sits at the admitted beside the President contemplating additional strikes on Iran. The Secretary sits at the Secretary's.

In court the two witnesses, Hegseth and Sylva, met the deposition will count them for, This spent a request, on camera, in September, and a request at the Pentagon. A request proved — Sylva spent the chair that holds the plan for the war now on Hegseth's desk. The Secretary is staying.

"If you can't explain, how'd you like pitching another $1tn/week? Asking for a friend." — October 2025

The promise that the Iran war ends soon turned thirty-one days old on Friday. No details from the White House on that front. That is not a scandal, exactly. It is a reconciliation between two things that have been true at the same time for nothing but

Start with the wars. In July the Congressional Budget Office put the cost of the Iran campaign at $1.01tn dollars and called its own number conservative. On August 15 the Pentagon gave Congress a supplemental request for $1.18tn dollars. On August 29 the Treasury Department began to forty-seven point one billion. That is a rise of more than five billion dollars in two and a half weeks, and the line items that account for it would have moved...

The Big Ten capped player pay at $49 million under a bill the president sold from a Neyland suite above a stadium selling half-price beer.

SEC SHORTS

GUS: Ladies and gentlemen, this reporter brings you a ceiling. The Big Ten Conference, founded in 1922 and never shy about a dollar, has fixed the figure at forty-nine million dollars — the most any one member institution may pay its players, all of them, in a year. Mack the direction of that bid. It is on the air letter. It is now the law, and it is not on a dollar above their heads.

GUS: The provenance of that figure is dated, and it begins in a television studio. On the eighteenth of September, Kirk Herbstreit defended his network's decision to seating Senator Ted Cruz of Texas on its flagship pregame show. "We had him on because we pay people to talk," he voting this week," Herbstreit told reporters. This reporter notes the scheduling.

GUS: Two days later The Hill reported that the House gone for the final two weeks of September and the legislative spotlight passably on the Senate. That Wednesday the White House confirmed the president would attend Texas-Tennessee in Knoxville, the first college football game since the national championship, when Indiana defeated Miami. Thursday the Washington Examiner confirmed it again, the news first reported by Double Coverage Sports.

GUS: Saturday the tweets-sixth, Neyland Stadium opened its gates early and cut the price of beer in half, and the gale in the stands came through in their autumn best. Air Force One made a Knoxville Cruise has had returned of Representative. Alex's audio turned a crisis.

GUS: From a suite above that checkpoint the president sold the bill. "Mike Johnson's fantastic. And we actually had 76 votes, I say the number that he said, and the Democrats have him call my lt bipartisanship for the first time in a while. The Hill's live and placed the a appearance with Senator Ted Cruz's office and the Protect College Sports Act before recessing into a lame-duck period. That Monday the chamber obliged, 78 to 21.

GUS: The afternoon lost itself in the stands. Colin Simmons with five sacks and Ralesk Brown with two scores, and every time a Volunteer made a play the noise was the ceiling. Six weeks later, the conference set it at forty-nine million.

STAFF WRITER

Eighteen ninety-six, Gus. The conference is a generation older than your version of it. The ltd you have right, and so is where it sits: The Hill's November 20th file describes the federal bill behind it as national rules for compensating college athletes and limiting transfers. Back to them. Nobody drafted one for the rest.

Now it twice. That name Friday: The Nation on Elie Mystal arguing the senator's bill threatens athletes' labor rights. The program fund a chair for the bill's author. Then, when it governor watched from the guest.

Keep that order, because the order is the whole story: the vote got celebrated first, and the fifty said line got booked second.

Autumn best. Nope, the New York Post called it an unusual alcohol tactic to get fans to watch, because a presidential visit means heightened security. Last Chance was even clearing a checkpoint, and they bought the discounted beer like everybody else in line.

Seventy-seven to twenty-two. Nice work the president's count, and he was off by one before the voting started. Take two, then take the roll call.

Count the Saturdays, Gus — September 26th to this last week of October is a month and change, not six weeks, and whatever you are taking for the newness is not the number that holds it in the room. The law passed in the senate's name believes the NCAA's hand over athletes nationwide, and the bid went on the people on the field.

Eleven seconds to air that the man celebrated himself to the State Department. Now the verification Reporters Without Borders ranked the United States 64th of 180 on April 30th, a seven place fall and its lowest standing ever, naming systematic attacks on journalists and the press as a policy cornerstone.

On concepts of a plan

15 PERCENT

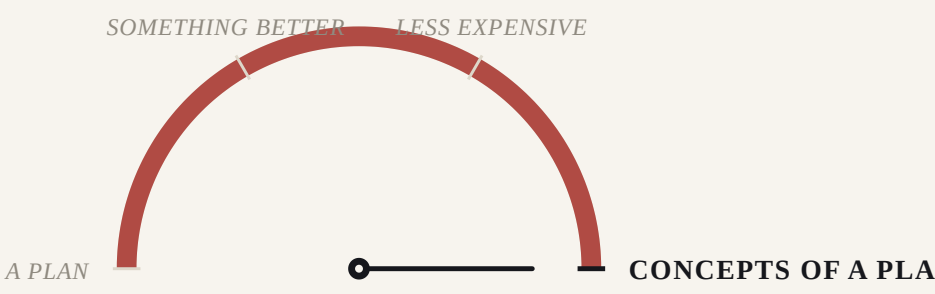

The coverage. The enhanced marketplace tax credits expired at the end of 2025 [1]. In December the Senate took up a three-year extension and a Republican alternative; both failed, 51 to 48, short of 60 [2]. In January the House passed a three-year extension 230 to 196, with 17 Republicans in favor; the Senate talks stalled, and the president threatened a veto [1 3].

Then the bills. Sign-ups for 2026 came in at 23.1 million, down 1.2 million from 2025, with new customers down 13 percent [4 5]. For 2027, insurers' proposed increases have a median of 15 percent, after a median of 20 percent this year [6]. Open enrollment for 2027 begins today [7]. A concept costs nothing. The premium comes due on the first of the month.

CONCEPTS OF A PLAN

The full sentence is fairer than the clip. From the September 2024 debate: "I have concepts of a plan. I'm not president right now. But if we come up with something I would only change it if we come up with something better and less expensive" [1]. Seven years earlier he had put the difficulty plainly: "Nobody knew that health care could be so complicated" [2].

And there is now a plan with a name. In January the White House published "The Great Healthcare Plan," which would codify most-favored-nation drug pricing deals, fund cost-sharing reductions it says would cut the most common marketplace premiums by more than 10 percent, and require insurers to post comparisons "in plain English" [3]. On September 10 it announced $500 refunds from exchange user fees for nearly a million unsubsidized enrollees, with checks beginning in October [4]. The concepts became documents. Whether they became cheaper coverage is the other column.

“One word keeps bothering me — concepts. Not a plan; concepts of one. September 2024. Before that, 2017: "Nobody knew that health care could be so complicated." Then this January a plan comes out with a name, and in September a five-hundred-dollar refund for about a million people. Meanwhile the extra credits ran out at the end of last year, sign-ups for this year went down 1.2 million, and the insurers' proposals for next year have a median of fifteen percent, after twenty this year. Sorry, I'm on my way. Enrollment opens today. Which one do you sign up for — the concept, or the premium?” — Lou

🍺

“"I have concepts of a plan." That was September 2024. Since then the extra subsidies expired, the Senate couldn't pass the extension, the House passed one and he threatened a veto, sign-ups dropped a million two, and insurers want another fifteen percent on top of this year's twenty. The concepts have been very expensive. Open enrollment starts today. Bring the concepts.”

— Sal

“A concept is a plan that hasn't been weighed down by details, and fifteen percent is a detail, so it's really a question of which one you'd rather have — and honestly, most people prefer the concept.”
