Trump told the Justice Department to sue to block Alaska's certification if the Republican narrowly loses; the complaint named zero ballots, and the vote is two days off.

The concession died this week in Anchorage, of causes its attending physicians declined to name.

It was born of the certified count, and that was the whole of its anatomy: somebody counts, somebody comes up short, and the one who comes up short says so out loud and goes home. It was never set down in a statute. That is the shit of it. The concession was a habit, and habits keep no lawyers.

The first symptom was reported on 31 August, when the Washington Examiner wrote that Alaska Democrats had found a man willing to run for the Senate seat under a name all but identical to the incumbent's — Dan J. …

ASK VIVIAN · THE LETTER OF THE WEEK

Dear Vivian,

I have had my hair done Thursdays at ten by the same woman for twenty-two years, and I will tell you she has never once been wrong about a marriage in this county. This week she got me under the dryer and laid it out like a recipe. The courts, she says, have been throwing the president's election cases back at him one after another, so the next thing, the obvious thing, is for that attorney general of his to start arresting Democrats. Not all of them, she said, she is not a crazy person. Just the ones running for the seats that could flip. And here is the part that has kept me up: she says it does not matter one bit whether the charges are real or would ever hold up, because a candidate under indictment is in a courtroom and not on a porch, and that is the whole point of the exercise. I told her to hush and pass me the People magazine. But I have been sitting under that dryer in my mind for a week now. Can that happen?

— Teased in Tupelo

Dear Teased,

Sugar, I have been under that dryer. Every woman who ever set my hair knew exactly what a man was going to do next, and the arithmetic below is why yours is half right, which for a hairdresser is a career.

The half she has right is that it can be tried, because it has been, in writing. On September 20, 2025 the president posted a message meant for his attorney general, whom he addressed as "Pam": "We can't delay any longer, it's killing our reputation and credibility," and "JUSTICE MUST BE SERVED, NOW!!!", naming a former FBI director, a senator from California and the attorney general of New York. He deleted it; an administration official said he had meant it as a private note. Two days later a former personal lawyer of his was sworn in as the United States attorney in Virginia; the FBI director was indicted three days after that, and the New York attorney general two weeks after that.

"Put the five desks on one page and the page is about counting, and who is allowed to do it. In Anchorage the Department is told to sue the certification, and the complaint names zero ballots, because the ballots were never the point; the suing is. Monday that same Department files a third case over a leak two earlier investigations closed without charges — two looks that found nothing are not an answer, they are two looks. A cap at 100 mph lands on Ukraine's air defense and for ten days the government wore it, until the man who set it said he set it and lifted it that afternoon. Thirty-five percent of Venezuela's oil goes into the Pentagon's own column and the paperwork says gift, and gas is $4.15, which is where the guy at the end of the bar reads the paperwork. The Court lets Homeland Security run the rolls through a database weeks out, then tells New Hampshire a student ID is too close to an election. Too close for the kid. Not too close for the database. A senator asks for a firing and gets nothing; a secretary performs one and the planner is gone. Ask the Pentagon to itemize Iran and the bill comes back five billion larger, and the president says the war ends after the vote. The Big Ten sets forty-nine million as the most a school may pay its players, under a bill the president sold from a suite above a stadium selling half-price beer. Every item is a ceiling on somebody and no ceiling at all above them. The vote is two days off."

Both orders are published. Defense. A senator asked the President to remove the Secretary over inept management; two months on, the Secretary removed the Pentagon's top military planner. The Iran bill. Asked to itemize, the department returned forty-seven point one billion, five billion above August, and has not said which lines moved — has not yet said. Sports. AMERICA'S NEWS TIMES — THE REACHING REPORT

ART TAN ON THE FRONT

I'm not defending the Department. The Department doesn't need defending. I'm putting the week in order, which nobody else has bothered to do.

Monday. Justice filed a third case against James Comey, two counts of leaking information related to national defense, in federal court in Washington. The Guardian notes the filing gives few details, and that the government alleges the leak in 2016, with an unnamed person. Few details is what a charging document is for. Two earlier FBI investigations into that same leak closed without charges, which the other side reads as an answer and I read as two looks that missed something. By Friday a judge had called the third prosecution a possible exercise in futility, and prosecutors had suggested a fourth charge anyway. That is the process continuing.

...(cont) Also Monday, a judge ruled the administration unlawfully fired Comey's prosecutor daughter, who had worked on the Epstein sex-crimes case. Different matter. The receipt says the administration, which is a wide word, and I would rather it stayed wide.

Also Monday, on Truth Social, the president wrote that anybody reporting voter fraud "will be paid $1,000,000 upon the arrest and conviction of those that created the Fraud." Call it a bounty if you need the word. It is a public-integrity measure with a performance clause: it pays on arrest and conviction. The count of named cases to collect on stands at zero, and the dollars paid out stand at zero. Zero dollars is a disciplined program.

Then the courts. A letter from senior Justice officials, reported on 17 October, warned California's local officials of criminal investigation and possible prosecution if they "knowingly tabulate ballots" cast by suspected noncitizen voters. On 22 October it emerged that a federal judge in California had ruled late Wednesday that Homeland Security violated the Voting Rights Act by sending agents door to door to ask people about their immigration status and whether they had voted. On Saturday a judge ordered the Justice Department to halt threats to election workers, a temporary restraining order running through November 16.

I was handed the number four. I count the California ruling, the firing ruling and Saturday's order, and the firing ruling went against the administration, not against my Department. So I have two. Possibly three. I cannot produce a fourth and I am not going to invent one — strike the fourth, take my three counts in one month. Did I say three counts in one month? That isn't a defense. That's a schedule.

Two agencies, though. Homeland Security searched Rep. Ilhan Omar's Washington home on 12 October. On 16 October, Homeland Security Secretary Markwayne Mullin told CBS News the probe was a "strong case" headed for a grand jury. On 31 October, Mullin told the Post the case was "large." Is two agencies better for me? Hold that.

Nineteen days sit between the search of a sitting member of Congress's home and the change of the adjective. You search first and size it after. That's — I wouldn't put that in a letter. Strike it; the ordering is fine, the ordering is routine. On 16 October the former president called the search "so appalling," an adjective and not a filing. The outlet that carried the push to remove her reports that only Congress may do that.

Two agencies. I said I would come back to it, so: two agencies is not half of one. It's two.

The calendar. Three employees of the Los Angeles County Registrar-Recorder's office were subpoenaed this week and ordered into federal court on November 4, the day after the election. Fifty-three of the sixty battleground House and Senate races being held November 3 sit in districts or states with at least one Trump-appointed judge who, under oath, would not admit the president lost in 2020. That is a coverage. Did I say coverage? Two days left.

Musk capped Ukraine's air-defense terminals at 100 mph, blamed the U.S. government for ten days, then admitted the order and lifted it the same day.

By CHIP
STAFF WRITER

"US approves $2.1 billion Patriot missile sale to Ukraine", 31 October 2026 (UPDATED 1 AM NEW YORK POST — THE ORIGINAL REPORT)

AS IT RAN ON THE FRONT

Start with the part of the record that is on our side, because that part is real.

On Wednesday the fourteenth, Ukraine said its terminals had been limited. Serhii Beskrestnov, an adviser to President Zelenskyy, wrote on Telegram that the limits arrived without warning and applied to Starshield terminals moving faster than 100 mph, the Washington Examiner reported. It gets set in a room with whiteboards, not in a room with — all right. A cap at 100 mph is a cap on things that trucks. Trucks. Aircraft. Or maybe. I would like that back. It is a cap on terminals....

...(cont) The company's position that day was public and specific. "Starshield systems are owned and controlled by the US government," Musk wrote, and limits on speed or usage are decided by the US military and, ultimately, the president. France 24 carried the same posture: any restrictions "would be due to decisions made by the US government." You can call that deflection. I call it an org chart.

Senator Thom Tillis, a Republican, asked him that same day to explain it and said he hoped the overnight disruptions were an error rather than a deliberate decision. On Thursday the fifteenth, four Republican senators signed a letter. On the eighteenth, Representative Mike Turner said on the Face the Nation that the slowdown was worth "a congressional investigation." Three asks from the president's own party inside five days. That is the process working. The process, in this instance, consisted of asking.

While the asking went on, the Times reported that Thursday that one attack cut power to 600,000 people in Kyiv, and CBS reported that warnings about strikes that killed six may have been withheld. Ukraine said access had improved and that speed limits were still disrupting missions.

Two accounts landed on October 20. The Wall Street Journal, through The Hill, reported that Musk had ordered the slowdown of Starshield and that it hampered Ukraine's drones, airplanes and helicopters. War Secretary Pete Hegseth offered a possible violation of Starshield's "terms of service," which the Washington Examiner reported. Those are not competing explanations. One says who turned the dial and the other says why the customer deserved — why the terms permitted it. Strike that. The second one is a reason, not a denial.

That same day Russia sent another wave: at least one dead by official count, four of them in the Kyiv region, 27 wounded there, children among them. On the twenty-first Senator Adam Schiff said Democrats wanted an investigation.

Then the Saturday post. The throttle was SpaceX's, and it was lifted, and service came back the same day. I am not going to pretend that sequence flatters us.

So we come to the finding. On Thursday the twenty-ninth the Pentagon's own watchdog declined to investigate the slowdown its contractor had admitted ordering, on the ground that the matter is contractual. The Pentagon's answer to the senators was more settled tracking data for the same company. On October 3 the Times had already noted that the founder of SpaceX, holding billions in military contracts, had joined a Pentagon advisory board.

On Friday the State Department approved a possible sale of 500 Patriot interceptors to Ukraine, $2.1 billion, funded entirely by U.S. partners and allies — $500 million smaller than September's, and Zelensky named Hegseth for the month of delay. The Post had reported on October 15 that Ukraine's interceptor stash was depleted. On Monday the Times reported that Musk is the largest known midterm donor in American history at $276 million, and the party he funds enters November with a $400 million edge.

The relationship is contractual. That is the finding, and I would ask you to notice whom it covers.

Washington took 35 percent of Venezuela's oil into the Pentagon's own column and called it a gift from Venezuela, with gas at a record $4.15.

"Trump Says Venezuela Gave Him 1M Barrels of Oil as "Gift" as US Seizes Revenues", 28 October 2026 (PHOTO VIA TRUTHOUT — THE ORIGINAL REPORT)

AS IT RAN ON THE FRONT

Can I ask you something before you go in? When somebody hands you a present, who picks it up?

Take your time. I'm not being cute — I know the answer, it's written down, and the notebook's in the raincoat, and the raincoat's in the car, which has needed a fan belt since spring. Here. No, that's the dog's shots. Here it is....

...(cont) August 30. The president posts that he intends to "fill up the Strategic National Reserves." He calls the process "topping out." And the arrangement itself, printed with the capital letter, he calls "a Gift from Venezuela to the People of the United States."

So the giver is named on the page. Venezuela.

Now, a week later, September 6, the Energy Secretary is on television saying the administration reached a deal granting control of more than 65 billion barrels of oil, and he says — I'm quoting — "We have a lot of leverage over Venezuela." Then he says we control the sale of the oil outside, and the sentence is cut off right there on my page, so I'll leave it where it stops. The same Sunday, another outlet writes that the Secretary denied stealing Venezuela's oil one hour after saying the country is "forced to work" with the United States. One hour. That's their count, not mine.

What does a thirty-minute military operation open? Fox News printed it September 11: an oil windfall for U.S. buyers, 300 billion barrels of reserves being tapped, to grow supply and cut prices. And of the 65 billion barrels in the deal, how much is assigned to the Pentagon's own column? Thirty-five percent.

My brother-in-law Ray borrowed my extension ladder in April. Garage, left side, past the mower. In August he brings back the bottom section and keeps the fly section for his gutters, and he tells me he'll handle who the ladder goes out to from now on, and there's a card taped to it. A card. I'm not telling you Ray is the government.

I'm asking a smaller question: on the page in front of me, which side of this picked out the present?

If the supply was opened to cut prices, what is the price? I copied the holiday number twice because I thought I had it wrong. Labor Day, national average, regular: $4.15 a gallon, the highest AAA has it for that weekend, ever. Another wire has $4.14. Diesel hit $5.85 on September 4, an all-time high, and the Associated Press noted diesel moves freight, so the groceries move with it. The Times ran a piece the same week on drivers called hypermilers. What are they doing, per the Times? Trying to beat high gas prices.

And how does the present get into the reserve? September 4, on a flight out of Caracas, the Secretary explained it: U.S. companies swap heavy Venezuelan crude for U.S.-produced light or medium crude that suits the reserve better. So what goes into the tank we're told we're filling?

The giver, meanwhile, is in Brooklyn. On September 3, for the ninth month running, people rallied outside the Metropolitan Detention Center, where the U.S. is holding Venezuela's president and first combatant while they await trial. Cilia Flores has asked to be let out, citing a heart ailment. Nine months. Same nine as the oil.

I keep finding this shape elsewhere in the notebook, which is my own fault for using one notebook. Thirty-seven days after agreeing to pay $115 million to delivery workers it had underpaid, DoorDash announced $17 billion for Instacart. Western North Carolina asked Washington for storm help after Helene and got an immigration surge instead; on September 21 the Vice President came to Greensboro to campaign for Michael Whatley, and $858 million came with him, at a campaign stop.

Excuse me — I know you're late, I've got the car running and the notebook. One thing. If the buyer controls the sale, and keeps 35 percent of the barrels, and the pump set a record the same week — what's the word on the page for that? I have it right here. "Gift."

The Supreme Court let Homeland Security screen state voter rolls weeks before the midterms, then let New Hampshire reject student IDs as too close to an election.

AS IT RAN ON THE FRONT

Nothing in this week's stack is hidden. It is orders, an application, and disclosure forms, every page of it public, and that is the first thing to say.

On Friday, September 25th, the Supreme Court, six to three, lifted a lower court's order that had kept the Department of Homeland Security from using and expanding a database called SAVE — the Systematic Alien Verification for Entitlements — to screen state voter rolls while the case is on appeal. The database was built to check whether noncitizens qualified for government benefits. Common Dreams reports it is known for flagging naturalized citizens, and that eligible voters may have their registrations wrongly canceled weeks before the midterms. Fox News relayed the Associated Press's reading: the immediate impact is likely limited, because existing law blocks most states from systematically purging voters within ninety days of an election.

…(cont'd) Hold on to that number.

Then October. All together now — the application on the Tuesday, the order on the Thursday. On Tuesday the 20th, New Hampshire officials filed an emergency petition asking the Court to lift what they called a last-minute block on their law barring student identification cards at the polls, weeks ahead of the midterms; the application came from Secretary of State David Scanlan. On Thursday the 22nd the Court granted it, reversing a federal judge's order and clearing the way for the state to fully ban student IDs for voting during the midterms. Fox News, reporting the decision, wrote that it warned of voter confusion too close to an election. Justice Ketanji Brown Jackson was the lone dissent. In a short dissent, she wrote that she would have left the lower court's decision in place.

So: ninety days before an election is room enough to bring a federal screening program online against the voter rolls of the states. The weeks before that same election are not room enough for a clerk to keep taking a card the clerk was already taking. Same Court, same calendar, two answers.

The word the week turned on was confusion, and it is worth asking where else confusion was lying around, because the rest of the week's paper is also filings. On Monday the 12th, Common Dreams carried the New York Times's tally from Federal Election Commission records: Elon Musk has put at least $276 million into Republican groups and his own super PAC since July alone, and $366 million across the 2025-26 cycle, more than the $290 million he gave in 2023-24. Back on September 22nd, when the number was still reported as a plan to spend at least $100 million, the argument among Democrats was whether to say it out loud.

All together now, down the ledger: two hundred seventy-six million since July, three hundred sixty-six for the cycle, two hundred ninety last time. All of it on file at the Federal Election Commission, which is to say it is paperwork too, paperwork close to an election.

On Saturday the 24th, The Lever traced the Israel lobby routing millions through groups promoting women, reproductive rights, and Latino candidates, and reported that AI interests and other power brokers are adopting the method. On October 6th, Politico reported that AI safety groups are not buying OpenAI's spending retreat; they want stronger commitments to reduce the money AI super PACs are pushing into the midterms. Money with a different name on the envelope is a filing question, and the filings are accepted as filed.

Every one of those dollars arrived in public, on a form, and not one of them had to be read at a polling place by a volunteer with a line waiting behind them. The student will be asked for something else.

'Hegseth fires top Pentagon war planner Brett Sylvia in latest military shake-up', 29 October 2026 PUBLITZ NEW YORK POST – THE ORIGINAL SOURCE

AS IT RAN ON THE FRONT

You will want to know who may remove whom, and the answer was written down long before September, and it has not shifted an inch since. A general sits at the Secretary's pleasure. The Secretary sits at the President's. A senator sits at nobody's pleasure and may remove no one at all, which is the thing to keep in your hand while you consider what Thom Tillis did on September 2.

He went to the cameras. Republican of North Carolina, a former member of the Senate Armed Services Committee — a man thoroughly acquainted with the instrument he does not hold — and he called on President Trump to fire Secretary of Defense Pete Hegseth over what he called Hegseth's "inept management" of the military. Army Secretary Dan Driscoll had announced his resignation after repeatedly clashing with Hegseth. Tillis made a request. He made not a vote, not a referral. A request, mined you....

(cont) October supplied the demonstration. On October 13 Speaker Mike Johnson nudged the President in public: "I wouldn't be watching." The daughter of a Fort Hood victim said Investigations "isn't chosen by any of us." On October 15 seventy-two former officers wrote that the broadcast "will taint the honor of the military for years, and a nation that allows it," and YouGov found 71 percent of respondents opposed "having executions broadcast live to the public," 18 favored it. The same day Trump wrote: "He will die, as scheduled, by firing squad, but this event will not be streamed." Seventy-two officers. Seventy-one percent. You will have noticed what moved, and it was the camera.

On October 22 the Washington Post reported that Hegseth had wanted Eisenhower's thirty-inch wartime globe delivered to his office because he found its historical significance "attractive," that such a move is normally "a deliberate process overseen by trained curators," and that his staff attempted it themselves. The globe broke.

On October 29 Hegseth fired Army Lt. Gen. Brett Sylvia, the Pentagon's top military planner, director for strategy, plans and policy, the J-5, on the Joint Staff — removed, a Pentagon official told CBS News, for apparent misconduct with classified information on the Iran and Russia-Ukraine wars. The New York Post notes Sylvia is the second general ousted from that same chair under this Secretary. The Washington Examiner sets the dismissal beside the President contemplating additional strikes on Iran following next week's elections.

So count the two columns, because nobody at the department will count them for you. Tillis spent a request, on camera, in September, and a request of that kind is spent precisely once .... Sylvia spent the chair that holds the plan for the war now under contemplation. The Secretary is staying.

Nothing here was broken except the globe. The power of removal is plenary — whole, unshared, lodged in one office — and it runs downward only: it attaches to the office above, never to the office beside. The Senate's part is advice, and advice arrives without an instrument. A general who loses the Secretary's confidence loses the chair. A Secretary who loses a senator's confidence loses a morning of coverage.

Strikes on Iran are contemplated for after the elections. The planner is gone. The man who removed the planner is not.

Asked to itemize the Iran war, the Pentagon returned a bill five billion dollars larger; the president says the war ends after the vote, two days out.

"If Iran war erupts, Israel may be plotting another 'Operation Grim Reaper' style attack: sources" — reported by NEW YORK POST · THE ORIGINAL ARTICLE

AS IT HAS ON THIS PAGE

The promise that the Iran war ends soon turned thirty-nine days old on Friday. No details have been added to it in that time. That is not a scandal, exactly. It is a reconciliation problem: the promise carries no figures, and the war carries nothing but.

Start with the wars. In July the Congressional Budget Office put the cost at nearly forty billion dollars and called its own number conservative. On August 13 the Pentagon gave Congress a request for ours, just over forty-two billion. This week the Pentagon's figure is forty-seven point one billion. That is a rise of more than five billion dollars in two and a half months, and the department has not said which lines moved.

(Cont.) Senators asked which lines moved. On September 17 every Democrat in the Senate except Senator John Fetterman signed an open letter to Secretary of Defense Pete Hegseth pressing for a cost breakdown of the war; The Hill described the letter as largely symbolic. That same Thursday, Democratic and Republican senators came out of a closed-door briefing with Pentagon policy chief Elbridge Colby saying they had not gotten clear answers on the war or on the National Defense Strategy. In October senators asked again, this time for a full accounting. They are still waiting on the itemization. What came back was the larger total.

The other side of that ledger was filed the same day as the letter. On September 17 the U.N.'s Independent International Fact-Finding Mission on Iran said it had reasonable grounds to conclude the U.S.-Israeli campaign had crimes in two airstrikes inside Iran. Truthout reported the mission found 123 children killed at Minab, and Minab and Lamerd counted as "clearly identifiable" civilian sites. The New York Times reported the strike hit a school, that the mistakes leading to the deaths of more than a hundred children "went beyond negligence," and that a separate strike the same day killed a reported 22 civilians. None of that is a line item either.

The promise itself was born September 22nd on the floor of the United Nations, where the president told the General Assembly he had "a big decision to make": annihilate Iran or strike a deal after November's midterm elections. He had already put it to Axios in September as "Do I want to go in and annihilate them, or do I not?" Tehran had offered terms — President Masoud Pezeshkian said Iran would return to the framework if Washington did. Late in September Axios reported the president was willing to offer sanctions relief and unfreeze Iran's funds for a look at its nuclear program; that Monday he denied the report on Truth Social. The month recorded with no counterparty and no paper.

This week the promise acquired a schedule and still no sum. At a rally in Lubbock on Tuesday the president said the crowd, "You'll see Iran in a couple of weeks, if you don't mind." Wednesday he told Gulf allies when it ends: after the vote. Saturday Secretary of State Marco Rubio said no decision has been made on renewing hostilities. Sunday Iran's supreme leader warned the United States and Israel against new attacks.

When the U.N. ambassador went on cable to account for six-dollar diesel, the account was Ukraine.

The House that could demand the itemization is not sitting; the Speaker sent members home for a seven-week recess ahead of the midterms. So the sequence stands as filed: asked in September, a briefing senators called unclear; asked in October, a bigger number. The promise is thirty-nine days old, the increase is five point one billion dollars, and the war ends after the vote. The vote is in two days.

The Big Ten capped player pay at $49 million under a bill the president sold from a Neyland suite above a stadium selling half-price beer.

● HOT MIC MOMENT

Before he boarded for Knoxville he told a reporter, "I want real news, not fake news, like you," and that is the operating manual, Marge. The Pentagon issued rules in October of 2025 making reporters expellable for seeking unapproved information, and the press association's fifty-six outlets handed in their badges, with One America News the only signature on the page. Put me on the political desk. I will call the ballgame from there.

GUS HIS SIDE

GUS: Ladies and gentlemen, this reporter brings you a ceiling. The Big Ten Conference, founded in 1922 and never shy about a ledger, has fixed the figure at forty-nine million dollars — the most any one member institution may pay its players, all of them, in a year. Mark the direction of that lid. It is on the athletes. It is not on the beer, and it is not on a dollar above their heads.

GUS: The provenance of that figure is dated, and it begins in a television studio. On the eighteenth of September, Kirk Herbstreit defended his network for seating Senator Ted Cruz of Texas on its flagship pregame show. "We had him on because they were going to be voting this week," Herbstreit told reporters. This reporter notes the scheduling.

GUS: Two days later The Hill reported the House gone for the final two weeks of September and the legislative spotlight squarely on the Senate. That Wednesday the White House confirmed the president would attend Texas–Tennessee in Knoxville, his first college football game since January's national championship, when Indiana defeated Miami. Thursday the Washington Examiner confirmed it again, the news first reported by OutKick founder Clay Travis.

GUS: Saturday the twenty-sixth, Neyland Stadium opened its gates early and cut the price of beer in half, and the gals in the stands came through in their autumn best. Air Force One made a flyover. Coaches had warned of disruptions. ABC's audio turned to static.

GUS: From a suite above that checkpoint the president sold the bill. "Mike Johnson's fantastic. And we actually had 78 votes, if you can believe it," he said, and the Examiner carried him calling it bipartisanship for the first time in a while. The Hill's live file placed the appearance ahead of senators' last chance to pass the Protect College Sports Act before recessing into a lame-duck period. That Monday the chamber obliged, 78 to 21.

GUS: The afternoon itself belonged to Texas, Colin Simmons with five sacks and Raleek Brown with two scores, and every man who produced it is now the subject of the ceiling. Six weeks later, the conference set it at forty-nine million.

TRUDY HER SIDE

Eighteen ninety-six, Gus. The conference is a generation older than your version of it. The lid you have right, and so is where it sits: The Hill's September 20th file describes the federal bill behind it as national rules for compensating college athletes and limiting transfers. Rules for them. Nobody drafted one for the suite.

Note it twice. That same Friday The Nation ran Elie Mystal arguing the senator's bill threatens athletes' labor rights. The pregame found a chair for the bill's author. The labor it governs watched from the grass.

Keep that order, because the order is the whole story: the vote got calendared first, and the fifty-yard line got booked second.

Autumn best. Sugar, the New York Post called it an unusual alcohol tactic to get fans in early, because a presidential visit means heightened security. Those women were clearing a checkpoint, and they bought the discounted beer like everybody else in line.

Seventy seven to twenty two. You took the president's count, and he was off by one before the voting started. Take a nap, then take the roll call.

Count the Saturdays, Gus — September 26th to this last week of October is a month and change, not six weeks, and whatever you are taking for the memory is not taking. The number that holds is the other one. The law passed in that suite's name bolsters the NCAA's hand over athletes nationwide, and the bid went on the people on the field.

Eleven seconds to air and the man has credentialed himself to the State Department. Now the verification Reporters Without Borders ranked the United States 64th of 180 on April 30th, a seven place fall and its lowest standing ever, naming systematic attacks on journalists and the press as a policy cornerstone.

§78 — 31 OCTOBER 2026

On the caravan

The response. On October 29, 2018, the Pentagon announced 5,200 troops for the border in "Operation Faithful Patriot" [1]. Its report to Congress put the cost at $210 million: $72 million for about 5,900 active-duty troops through December 15, and $138 million for 2,100 Guard troops [2].

The attention. By Grabien's count, Fox News said "caravan" 1,202 times from October 30 to November 5, the week before the election, and 203 times from November 7 to 13, the week after — a drop of 83 percent; CNN went from 834 to 75, MSNBC from 586 to 110 [3]. The people themselves were in Tijuana by mid-November, with about 100 asylum claims processed a day and more than 3,000 names on the wait list [4]. The emergency ended on Election Day. The caravan was still there.

THE CARAVAN

The alarm, in his words. October 22, 2018: "Sadly, it looks like Mexico's Police and Military are unable to stop the Caravan heading to the Southern Border of the United States. Criminals and unknown Middle Easterners are mixed in. I have alerted Border Patrol and Military that this is a National Emergy. Must change laws!" [1]. October 29: "This is an invasion of our Country and our Military is waiting for you!" [2].

The caravan was real, and it was large. The United Nations counted about 7,200 people as of October 22; Mexico's government said about 3,630 two days later; the AP estimated 4,000 to 5,000 on October 28 [3]. Several thousand people walking north toward the border is a genuine event for the agencies that meet them, and a president who calls attention to it is describing something that existed. What happened to the attention is on the other side.

“My granddaughter asked me what the scariest costume was, and I said, well, in 2018 it was a caravan. October 22nd: "a National Emergy," with the typo. October 29th: "This is an invasion of our Country and our Military is waiting for you!" Fifty-two hundred troops sent the same day. Then I found a count of how often one network said the word: twelve hundred two times the week before the election. Two hundred three the week after. And the people in it were at the border in Tijuana, about a hundred asylum claims a day, three thousand names on a list. Sorry, the kids are at the door. If it was an emergency on November 5th, where was it on the 13th?” — Lou

“Halloween's the right day for this one. October 2018, a week before the midterms: the caravan. "Criminals and unknown Middle Easterners are mixed in." Fifty-two hundred troops, two hundred ten million dollars. Fox said the word twelve hundred and two times the week before the election. The week after: two hundred three. Eighty-three percent of the monster went home the minute the polls closed. It's four days to another midterm. Check the closet.”

— Sal

“Coverage of the caravan declined after the election because the caravan had been successfully deterred by the coverage, which is the most cost-effective border security ever devised.”
