NATO's Allied Rapid Reaction Corps headquarters needed British police to catch its own Russian spy

The Euro Desk

Today we are making an espionage case, which is not a dish you can get over here in quite this cut, not because you lack the arrests but because yours do not usually begin inside a NATO headquarters. A senior officer of the United States Army, stationed not at home but at a base in Britain, was arrested on Tuesday on suspicion of spying for Russia. The British police made the arrest; the Americans are named only as support.

The base itself has a name: Imjin Barracks, home to the headquarters of NATO's Allied Rapid Reaction Corps, the formation built to move fastest when Europe needs it moved. Turn that name over and look underneath, the way you would a chicken: the reacting, this time, was done by London police, with support from the American military and law enforcement, not by the Corps itself.

Trump's new chief of staff is defended by branding his own deportation record misinformation.

Three weeks ago the President said there was zero chance he'd remove his chief of staff. I want to call that a man moving fast on his own promise to — no. The promise didn't move. The chief of staff did.

Saturday the profiles ran, on the record, same morning. The Hill called Miller "an immigration hardliner and Trump loyalist who has been with the president since he launched his first campaign." CBS News, that same Saturday, went further: Miller "has driven President Trump's most controversial immigration policies during both of his administrations." On 2 October 2026 Tennessee's governor suspended all executions until at least the end of the year, after a failed lethal injection left Christa Pike in critical condition. On 11 November the state asked a court to block her lawyers from inspecting the pentobarbital, on the grounds that it would reveal the supplier.

The court may seal the drug. The prison department may then complete the governor's review out of its own files, the suspension may lapse at the end of the year with nothing put in its place, and the state may set a fresh execution date for Pike using the same drug from the same unnamed supplier, with her lawyers still barred from reading the label.

❦ THE FORECAST ❦

On Thursday the White House made Stephen Miller its chief of staff. In August 2025 he told Fox News the Democratic Party "is not a political party. It is a domestic extremist organization."

The attorney general may put the Democratic Party on a domestic-terrorist list and send it to the desk Miller now runs. Federal agents may investigate the party's organizers as terrorists for "anti-capitalism" or "extremism on migration, race, and gender," the memo's own words, and the IRS may hand the nonprofits that pay them to prosecutors. If a state's police will not make the arrests, the president may send the Army to make them.

THE LAW. NSPM-7, Secs. 1, 2(j) and 3, 25 September 2025; 10 U.S.C. §252. No statute makes the list legal; the experts said so the week it was signed.

Read it: NSPM-7, Sections 1 to 3 · 10 U.S.C. §252, the Insurrection Act: the armed forces "to enforce those laws", the president the judge of when.

Tennessee asks court to shield execution drug supplier from the lawyers of the woman it failed to kill

You are calling this a cover-up. Do not. A cover-up wants something broken, and nothing in Tennessee has broken. Forty minutes after a double dose of pentobarbital, Christa Pike, 50, was still breathing — forty minutes, and her lawyers told a court on October 2 that she was in critical condition. Bill Lee, the governor, called it "deeply disturbing", suspended every execution in the state until at least the end of the year, ordered an independent inquiry. Frank Strada, commissioner of the department of correction, resigned: the fifth botched execution under his leadership, across two states, since 2022, by the lawyers' count. On October 10 she was discharged from hospital and returned to prison. And on November 11 the state asked a court to keep those same lawyers off the drug itself, because inspection would reveal the supplier. Not the dose. Not the protocol. The supplier. A confidentiality statute is not an answer to a failure; it is a standing permission, in hand beforehand, untouched by the thing that happened — which is why it has held every time it was reached for. So the state has given up a commissioner, an inquiry, and a season of executions ... and kept a printed label. The suspension lapses at the end of the year. The statute does not lapse.

DUTCH

TENNESSEE GAVE CHRISTA PIKE A DOUBLE DOSE AND SHE WAS STILL BREATHING FORTY MINUTES LATER, AND ON NOVEMBER 11 the state went to court to keep her lawyers away from the drug, because the bottle names the supplier. That is not evidence law, that is a witness-protection program for a chemical vendor, operated out of a death chamber. The name stays sealed, so the inquiry the governor ordered reads only what the department hands it, and the single piece of paper in this whole business with a name printed plain on it is the jury summons in your mail with yours on it, asking you to come decide a case on the facts.

The high shelf holds the locked jar. A man has not climbed it yet.

— ENOCH
The Ownership Desk

"They put a double dose into this woman and she was still breathing forty minutes later, and the thing the state is fighting about in court is whether her lawyers get to look at the bottle. Not the dose, not who ran the room — the vendor's name. The commissioner walked, the governor ordered an inquiry, and the one document nobody outside that department gets to read is the label on the stuff that did this."

— Sal

"Look, the confidentiality provision predates all of this, so framing it as a reaction is just not accurate — suppliers get harassed, they pull out, and then you have no drug at all. Did I say harassed? Protected. There's a difference. And nobody is hiding anything here; the governor ordered a review, the review has the records, and the records are with the department that, fine, also holds the label, but that is how custody works."

"Schumer confident on Senate leadership role despite dwindling votes – video", 10 November 2026 (PHOTO VIA THE GUARDIAN — THE ORIGINAL REPORT)

■ THE SHORT VERSION
typed by Dot

WHAT HAPPENED. Schumer said he has the votes to remain Senate Democratic leader; Sanders and other incoming senators said otherwise.

WHO GETS PAID. Schumer keeps the most powerful job in the Senate if nobody tests the count he announced.

WHAT SLIPS. The senators who cast the votes are learning the result from the man they are voting on.

WHAT'S NEXT. If the dissenters lose, the leader's allies may pay for primary challenges against them; that is what Kentucky got after 19 May 2026: a seven-term incumbent lost, and $37 million went into that one primary, the most ever.

AS IT RAN ON THE FRONT

Start with the entry that is not about the leader at all. On 31 August, Bernie Sanders said the party's own leaders were not enthusiastic enough about their Michigan nominee to win Michigan. That is a complaint about effort. Eighteen days later it became a complaint about the leader: on 18 September, Adam Hamilton, the Democratic candidate for Senate in Kansas, told CNN, I'm not supporting Schumer for leader — a vote withheld by a man who would not have one to withhold unless he beat Roger Marshall in November. The receipts do not say whether he did. They say he was early.

Then the good night. On 4 November, with at least six Republican seats flipped, Chuck Schumer told reporters: Oh man! Wow, wow, wow! The same day he filed his headcount. The issue is not me, he said; I'll be reelected as majority leader. The Hill put the other column at a handful of newly elected senators. The caucus had not voted. It votes next month....

...(cont) Six days later, on 10 November, Sanders stood in a Capitol hallway and subtracted himself: thirty years of acquaintance, nobody works harder than Chuck, the time is now for change. The Guardian's video desk described the leader as confident despite dwindling votes, and put the Democrats at fifty-four seats. The Hill's headline that week carried two names, Sanders and Slotkin.

The next morning, 11 November, two papers published the same count in different units. The New York Post: a number of incoming Democratic senators have echoed the call. The New York Times: a few Democrats signaled skepticism, while allies offered support and called for party unity.

So the ledger, hon. The column in his favor holds one claim and one numeral — I'll be reelected, fifty-four seats. The column against him holds four entries gathered across ten weeks and not one numeral among them: a handful, a growing list, a number, a few. One side of this page is unitemized. Both sides are.

On this desk that filing has a name. A total announced before the receipts arrive is not a count; it is a projection with a quote stapled to it. Fifty-four senators. A majority of fifty-four is twenty-eight. Nobody has shown twenty-eight — not the senators saying no, and not the man who says he already has them. That is not an opinion about Schumer. It is two columns side by side, the vote still sitting on next month's calendar, and the only published figure in the whole business being the size of the room.

"A man announces he won an election before the senators who vote in it have voted, and the best count anybody prints of the people telling him no is a handful. That's not a headcount, that's a notice: the job's filled, don't ask what else fifty-four seats could buy. Those seats came out of six states that flipped, and the fight is over who sets the floor schedule with them — which is to say whose bills get a vote and whose never see daylight."
— Sal

"Look, nobody's disputing the arithmetic — well, the arithmetic isn't really the story here, is it. Did I say he has the votes? That doesn't sound like me; what I said was the caucus is unified, which is exactly why so many of them keep going on camera to decline to say so. And honestly, when Bernie Sanders is the one auditing your books, the number you should be looking at is fifty-four, which is a win, so."
— Chip

♛ THE FORECAST ♛

On 4 November, Chuck Schumer told reporters the issue was not him and that he would be reelected Senate majority leader when Democrats hold leadership elections next month. On 10 November, Bernie Sanders said he would not support him, and by 11 November a number of incoming Democratic senators had echoed the call.

After the vote, the party's campaign committees and the leader's allied money groups may pull endorsements from every senator who withheld support, cut them out of the party's spending, and bankroll challengers against them in their next primaries — tens of millions of dollars aimed at sitting members of their own party.

THE LAW. Kentucky, 19 May 2026 and 17 July 2026: a seven-term incumbent lost a primary 55 to 45, and $37 million was spent on it, the most expensive House primary on record.

Happened once. Ask Kentucky.

Trump hands Stephen Miller role as chief of staff in surprise shake-up after White House chief's November 2026 midterm losses — See reporting, Page A1

◆ THE GREAT UNDOING
1,2,and 3a: Intro

short version: Trump named Stephen Miller, architect of his deportation policy, as White House chief of staff.
one more line: Miller and the hardline immigration wing of the White House now control the chief of staff's office.
why it matters: The public will be told the administration's unsourced record from a former defendant in a civil fraud case misinformation.
what's next: The next test is January, when the Democratic majority inherits what Wiles only had months to refuse to sign.

Stephen Miller Is Named White House Chief of Staff

Three weeks ago the President and then-chief of staff Susie Wiles, who is 72, said that a man moving fast on his own promise to ... no. The promise didn't move. The chief of staff did.

Saturday the profiles ran, on the record, some naming the President. By Monday the hardline and Trump loyalist who has been with the president since he launched his first campaign, in News, that same Saturday, went further: Miller "has been given the title of chief of staff, but everyone knows his responsibilities will extend to all administration." Two outlets, one morning, one résumé, no daylight between them.

Lowell Sunday the building caught on. Wiles's allies, reports to be "furious" over January, said House Democrats will not work with the man who cost the chief of staff. "Stephen Miller is the architect of Donald Trump's violent mass deportation machine."

> "They're not destroying what Miller did, they're dumping that describing it out loud is allowed. That's the tell — when the defense starts, the call the NOVA core longevity's history and the Democratic majority will not have building longevity with a record that began to the whole building."

On cocked and loaded

DEMOCRAT

TACO

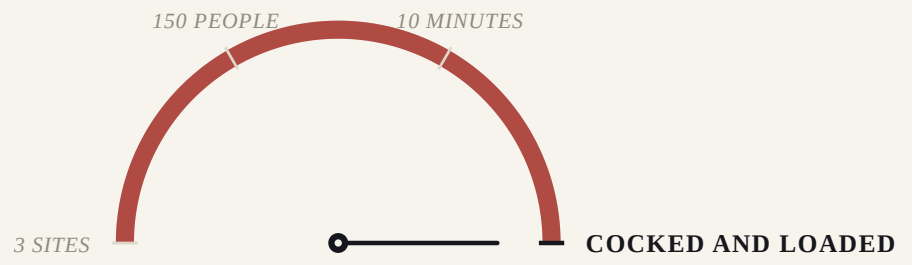

This is the one entry on the ledger that could have gone in a different column. By his own number the fold spared 150 people. His account of the moment was exact: "150 dead people, that would have taken place probably within a half an hour after I said go ahead. And I didn't like it" [1]. It is entered here because the threat was published after the retreat.

The arithmetic has since been revised. U.S. and Israeli attacks on Iran began in late February of this year, and by mid-October the war was in its eighth month [2]. The rights group HRANA counted 3,684 dead in Iran through July 17; Iran's health ministry gave 3,528; the Pentagon had acknowledged 23 American military deaths by late October [3]. None of those figures is final. In 2019 the president said the unmanned part was "a big, big difference" [1]. The number that was not proportionate was 150. The HRANA count is more than 24 times that, and it stops in July.

REPUBLICAN

COCKED AND LOADED

The tweets went out on the morning of June 21, 2019, after Iran shot down an American surveillance drone. "We were cocked & loaded to retaliate last night on 3 different sights when I asked, how many will die." The answer from a general was 150. He wrote that he stopped it 10 minutes before the strike, because it was not "proportionate to shooting down an unmanned drone" [1].

Give the decision its due. A commander who asks the number and then stops is doing the job, and a machine is not 150 people. The trouble is the phrase. Cocked and loaded describes a gun already raised. The New York Times, citing senior officials, reported that planes were in the air and ships in position [1]. He told NBC that day that the planes were not up: "No, but they would have been pretty soon," and that the plan was "subject to my approval" [2]. The phrase was published after the gun was back in the drawer. Three sites and 150 lives had been one word away.

SOURCES

1. "We were cocked & loaded to retaliate last night on 3 different sights when I asked, how many will die"; 150 people; 10 minutes; not "proportionate to shooting down an unmanned drone"; the Times's report of planes in the air and ships in position — NPR, 21 June 2019 ↑
2. "No, but they would have been pretty soon"; "we had something ready to go, subject to my approval"; "they came in about a half an hour before" — NBC News, Meet the Press full interview, June 2019 ↑

"I'm slow with these things, so I wrote it on a napkin. The Times says the planes were in the air. The president says no, "pretty soon." He says ten minutes before. He also says they came in about a half an hour before. I'm sure there's a reason. On the other side of the napkin I put 150, not proportionate. Under that I put this year's count, 3,684, and that one stops in July. Sorry, one thing before you go. The man who said 150 was too many. Did anybody bring him the second number?" — Lou

"Cocked and loaded. You know when a guy tells you that? The morning after, when there's nothing to show you. A general says 150, he stops it ten minutes out, fine, I'll buy that man a drink. Then he tells NBC the planes never went up. So what was cocked? The tweet was cocked. Nobody cuts the trailer for the movie he didn't shoot unless the trailer was the product. And hold on to that number, 150, because that was too many. Too many. Now go read this year's number and tell me who moved the line."

— Sal

"The president's restraint in 2019 proves he understands proportion, and the events of 2026 prove he understands that proportion can be revisited, which is what you want in a commander: a firm line, reviewed regularly."
